So the talk went on, and Albert listened awhile, but presently left them, and going to his father's house went to his own room, where he locked himself in; and sitting down by the window, gazed out upon the sky, apparently lost in serious thought. At last his face brightened; an earnest, ardent look came into his dark blue eyes; he started up and walked around the room excitedly.

Then leaving his room he went to his father's office. Mr. O. was very much occupied, and Albert waited as patiently as he could till the visitor was gone, then went in.

"Father," said he, "can you spare five minutes to talk with me?"

"Yes, my son, to an if you like.

"Is it true, father, that Mr. J., your book-keeper, has enlisted?"

"Yes, Albert, he is going as ensign; he told me so this morning, and I have sent money up to your mother not an hour ago, that she may buy the material for the regimental colours. Your sisters will help her make the flag, and all must be ready in four days to present to the regiment before they leave."

This news was very interesting to Albert, but he did not comment on it; his mind was full of another subject.

"Father," he asked, "have you engaged another book-keeper?"

"No, I have not. I think I must send to Boston and advertise for one."

"Oh, don't, father! Oh, how I wish—oh, if I dare to say it!"

His father looked at him in surprise, and said kindly:

"You surely know, my son, that you may dare say anything to me."

"O, father," the boy exclaimed impetuously, "you know how much I wish to serve my country! And you said I was not old enough to go to war, but might prove myself a better patriot by staying at home—and now here is a chance to do something; and, father, do not refuse to let me, for if you do I shall break my heart."

"My dear Albert, I yes know I never refuse you anything reasonable."

"I know it, father, but this—O, I know just what you will say! But I can't help it! Father, this morning I heard some of the men talking, and there were two who wanted to enlist and would, but one had an infirm old mother to look after, and the other had two little children—motherless children—and so they could not either of them go, though they wanted to so much."

"And so you want me to provide for the old mother and the little children? Well, I'll try to do it—hey—"

"No, no, father, not that; I know you have quite enough on your hands as it is—so many to help—but, father, I want to take care of them myself."

"You take care of them!" said the father, in astonishment.

"Yes, father, if you'll only let me be bookkeeper in Mr. J.'s place. You know he has been teaching me to fly, and before he goes he can show me just how the books stand—and if I should require any looking over, why, father, I'll work for half price. You pay him one hundred dollars a month, and if you'll pay me fifty, it will be quite enough for all I want, then—"

"But, Albert," interrupted his father, "wait a moment—don't get excited over it, but give me a little time to consider! You wish to be my bookkeeper?"

"Yes, father."

"But in that case you need to be here in the office all day, every day—from eight in the morning till six in the evening."

"Yes, father, I know it."

"Have you thought how arduous and confinedvere a life that will be for you?"

"Yes, father, I have thought it all over and am not afraid. Just try me and you'll see how I'll stick to business."

"But then your studies, my son. Have you given up your plan of going to college? And must I relinquish my hope of seeing my son one of our ablest lawyers and politicians before I die? Must this be given up?"

"No, father, not yet. I have thought it all over in my own room this morning, and though a week since it would have almost broken my heart to have met with any delay in my studies, yet now I think I can wait a year longer before going to college; and by studying evenings I will not lose anything I now know."

"But if the war should not be ended in a year—if it should last till you are too old to go to college—or if these men should never come back—should be killed—then you would have their families to provide for all their lives. Would you not then regret what you had done?"

"The boy's face grew very pale. He sat silent awhile; the large tears came in his eyes and splashed down, but he soon brushed them away and looked up with an untroubled face, saying:

"You know, father, that many of our most eminent men never went through college; so if I live I promise you that my heart shall yet grow warm with love and pride for me."

He did not know, as his father rose and turned to his desk, that his heart was already throbbing with love and pride for his only boy; he heard the quiver in his voice as Mr. O. replied:

"I honor your sentiment, my son, but can not give you my answer till to-morrow morning. In the meantime do not mention the subject to my one. And now I must leave you, Albert, for I have something else to do."

So Albert hastened home to his own room, where he was soon immersed in bookkeeping, that he might be sure of his proficiency in case his father might accept his offer.

That night Mr. O. consulted his wife, and in the morning told Albert he might do as he wished.

Charley B. and William H. were very much surprised to hear Albert's proposition; but when they found he was in earnest, and his father approved his plan, they enlisted and went, leaving their dear ones in his care.

And well did he redeem his promises. Good and skilled, it grew to love him as her son; and many a prayer went up from her heart for Albert.

He watched over the little children, too; in a long, bootlessly way, going to see them often, and frequently sending them little gifts "from brother Albert" when he could not go. Then they and their aunt sent Emily were invited to his father's house every Sunday to dinner and tea.

The four dollars a week which he gave aunt Emily, and the three dollars which he gave Mrs. B., still left him money enough to help many other soldiers' families, and Albert fully realized the truth, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

The year was not quite gone when Charley B. came home with one leg, and soon the news came of William H. "killed on the field of battle." Then Mr. O. provided for the two children, leaving them still in the care of their dear aunt Emily; and when Albert had instructed Charley in the mysteries of book-keeping Mr. O. took him into his employ and sent Albert to college.

PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR maintains that most of the meteor streams with which the earth comes in contact—derived from the earth itself—that—thrown off by volcanic action at a time when the internal forces of our planet were sufficiently active to give them the initial velocity re-quisite to carry them beyond the earth's attraction—some twelve miles a second. Comets, which he regards as the parents of meteor streams, he thinks may have originated outside our solar system. Most of the comets whose orbits belong to our system he thinks originated in the larger planets. The sun is now perhaps giving birth frequently to comets, which probably pass beyond the limits of its attraction.

THE GARDEN OF THE GODS.

The Wonderful Sights to Be Seen Near Colorado Springs.

It is just a natural transition from the "Valley of the Alpuris" to "the Garden of the Gods"—a few weeks ago in the fo mer, and now among the stone gods of the latter. The garden lies about five miles from Colorado Springs and two from Manitou, and is at the very foothills of the Rockies, and the result of the action of frost upon the highly colored sandstone. Formerly a massive ledge cropped out here and bending south toward Cheyenne Mountain. At first it was perhaps covered with earth and grass—the former the washings of the range—but the wind and rain of centuries exposed it, and finally the ledge stood bare, and being extremely soft and friable it gu ikly wore away, not regularly, but here and there, soft portions giving way quickly, the harder parts showing greater resistance, so that now the stone remaining presents the most grotesque and remarkable appearance imaginable.

From the east the disconnected masses present a massive front; but viewing them from the north or northwest, what were apparently detached are now seen to be thin slabs, of a curious and wedge-like appearance, as if rocks several hundred feet high had been sawed down to such an attenuation that they could be piled hold together, and in pairs and groups placed in the soil.

I approached the garden in a unusual way—by horseback over the rolling prairie—and as we reached the last elevation before descending into this favored spot we stopped and gazed upon with them enjoyed the view. To the east a vast sea of rolling prairie, on here and there a single spot, like a ship, telling of the great cattle ranches of the State. Away to the west, almost above us, rose the Rockies, cut and scared by innumerable canyons, the ridges and ranges rising higher and higher, culminating in the whitewashed ring, Pike's Peak.

On the north slope of Cheyenne Mountain is the grave of "H. H.," facing the gateway of the grand canyon and the Garden of the Gods. Immediately at our feet the latter lay, a strange assemblage of vivid gr ess—the carpet of grass—reds, whites and grays—the latter the sandstone rocks. Some of the lofty mounds had shdown in their tops, where one might well imagine some Turkish morning set up in prayers was made. A group of huge rocks to the left were distinctly human, natural pillars several hundred feet high; and after winding down into the valley we passed between two grim sentinels and were in the garden. At every turn the rocks take new shapes. Yes they are slate cut from some ancient volcanic rock and placed here by Mother Titania worker to cook. So they are the tints, so utterly crude, vivid, and unharmonious, that we can almost feel the glow.

A few steps on and all has changed. The slabs which I have been describing slaped monuments now seem to take human form, or resemble a group of mammoth tee-pins, and these huge bowlders on the mountain side are the balls with which the giants are wont to bowl. But there are no gods here, as they could never be in a strong mind the temptation to bowl some of these gigantic pins into the valley below.

The road winds about among the ledges, so that the strange forms can be examined on every side, and perhaps at what is called the Man tou entrance are seen some of the most remarkable formations. Here an acre or so is covered with stone toadstools, so exact that they might well be taken for the gigantic growths of some former age hardened into stone and petrified as are the fossi l forests of Arizona. In some this top portion was six or seven feet in diameter, while the stem would be hardly as large as a man's body. Everywhere above here ruin and disintegration was apparent. Great ledges were bent and broken, hanging in space ready to fall.

Weird faces, contorted bodies, arms lifted up in supplication, strange, reptile-like forms—in fact, there was nothing that the imagination could picture but found a place in this motley assemblage. By the road, as I destined some day to roll into it, stands a bowlder weighing perhaps a hundred tons, that can easily be rocked, so deftly has it been balanced by wind and rain.

North of the Garden of the Gods is a smaller continuation even more remarkable. This is Glen Eria, the property of Gen. William J. Palmer, who has converted the place into a resort into a beautiful park, throwing it open to the general public. The monoliths here are extremely peculiar. One rises to a height of three hundred feet and is scarcely six feet in diameter; enlarging at the top and leaning a trifle, it has the appearance of a huge mushroom in being or status. It is called the Major Domo, or, as an old Scotch lady informed me at a little house at the entrance, where curiosities were sold "Hi were named a ter the Major Dormer."

—Letter from Co orado.

A MELODRAMATIC, as well as scientific, picture of the Deluge is found in the living arising from the presence of the dead is drawn by Dr. Liklind, of Stockholm. To remedy the evils resulting from delay in burials and subsequent decomposition, the doctor proposes to render some ample process of embalmment compulsory, and suggests the creation of a corps of embalmers for that purpose. This plan rather runs counter to modern views on the subject of burial, which tend to fewer methods allowing of rapid disintegration, and is, besides, far inferior to cremation, which probably pass beyond the limits of its attraction.

"YES, sir," said the Great Traveler, "I have seen, with my own eyes, a wild Indian take the scalp of a white man and tear it off with his teeth, and it made my blood run cold." "That's nothing," said the Skeptical Boarder, "that's nothing; I saw him in Lynn, on Market street, I have seen a man actually take three men in succession by the scalp and actually lift their hair from their heads." "Why, the man must have been crazy drunk or a lunatic," said the G. T. "Perfectly crazy drunk or a lunatic, I mean," said the S. B. "Well, who in the name of goodness was he?" Getting a Drink.

"I was in Dakota myself," remarked a passenger, "and I saw how easily some of those tramp make a living. for I suppose they call it a living when they get a drink of whisky and something to eat thrown in. The tramps were thick and had been for some time. They would hang around a small town and bother the people almost to death. It is really dangerous to have so many of these vagabonds about. But they won't work, they tell me, and the result is that it is pretty difficult to get rid of them.

"Up in a little town—the name I don't recall—I happened to be waiting from the train until another. There was nothi g to do, so I went into a saloon to get some beer. While there drinking three of these tramps came in and ordered three drinks of whisky.

"'Have you got any stuff?' said the saloon-keeper.

"'Course,' replied one of the thirty trio, 'we's playing the "crow" act, we is.'

"'Where?' asked the man behind the bar.

"The spokesman named the farm at which he was employed, showed an order, and the three men got their drinks and departed. When they went out I asked what was meant by the 'crow act,' when he told me that some of the farmers got the tramps to take the part of crows to scare off the wild fields and keep the birds away. The tramps took turns, he said, in stretching up on a platform high above the field and occasionally throwing a rock at a flock of birds. As there was no work about it the tramps took it. In return they get little, usually one or three drinks and a bite to eat, but even this they considered, living as long as they had not have to work for it."—St. Paul Globe.

DANGEROUS DRUGS.

How to Control Effectually All Such Horrible Habits.

Rochester (N. Y.) Post-Express.

A gentleman who has spent 1.. summer abroad said to our reporter that the habit of improper him self of all sa ies among the ho ldays one encounters abroad, and the ease with which the people display in the conduct of business affairs. "Men boast here," he said, "that they have for years taken a day off and have not yet lost a single business day. Mr. H. W. Beecher, who was present at the time, said: 'Why do you not take a day off on the water. Best to-day.'"

"Then I suppose you have been abstaining extraordinarily?"

"Not at all. We have always heretofore sailed on liberality during July, August, and September, but this summer we have kept it running, and right to supply the demand, which has been three times greater than ever before in our history at the seaside."

"How do you account for that?"

"The increase has come from the universal recognition of the excellence of our preparations. We have been nearly ten years before the public, and the sales are constantly increasing. Our newspaper advertising is constantly diminishing. 'Sky, high, scenic and sublime' seem now to be entirely unnecessary, and our advertisements are only eclectic specific notices, and yet all the business of our establishment is done by those."

"Have you evidence of this?"

"Abundance! Only a few weeks ago Dr. J. P. Stephens, of Lithonia, Ga., specialist in the cure of narcotic, etc., habits told me that he had prescribed our preparations for years, and had found them unfailing for years, testifying and analyzing all the time, and yet he had never seen one. He said he may be aware, the excessive use of all narcotics, tends to cause decay of the teeth, and such a case can be centered to health the habits cannot be broken up; he had the opium habit, which such men as J. M. Hall, M. D., President of Medical College, Louisville, Ky., and Prof. Archer Sod, M. D., Professor of Surgery in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Cincinnati, Ohio, and Prof. Dalton, Secretary of Medicine at Columbia, who, after years of experience, pronounced this form of disease a remedy known to science or to acquaintance, it spoke to Mr. Beecher's sermon.

"Are many persons addicted to the use of opiate drugs?"

"Millions are forty millions of people in the world, and of these, one-fourth, or ten millions, are victims of morphine, opium, and chloral habits, and of these fifty-fifty are in such habits about them—so many people are victims of these habits. They have the pains and symptoms of what they call malaria and other diseases, when in reality it is the demand in the system for those terrible drugs, and the medicine is taken and temporary relief is obtained, which contains so many dangerous drugs, and yet it is only a temporary relief, and must be repeated, and the kidneys and liver by what Dr. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, when the kidneys and liver are inactive, the activity of their important function, renews it, and thus averts fatal maladies, the most difficult to cope with, and which nevertheless, a dangerous use of bodily force, stamina and fresh and pleasant of disease, liver complaint and debility are also remedied by it.

Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Kaleidoscopes.

Kaleidoscopes are made to sell at from five cents to five dollars each, the latter being used a great deal by carpet designers and for like purposes. In a factory in New York a reporter found this being the system of operations: The first young woman wraps black paper about the glass reflectors which produce the optical delusions. These strips of glass, when thus arranged and fastened together, form the body of the kaleidoscope. The next girl simply inserts the united reflectors into the pasteboard cover and then passes the octagonal pasteboard tube to her neighbor. Number three adjusts the brass ring which secures the glass disks in the end. Between the disks or plates are placed the scraps of colored glass, the beads and various trinkets which tumble about in the kaleidoscope as revolved, and when reflected by the mirrors form diamonds, fleur-de-lis, stars, and other ornamental designs, fantastic forms. The other young women are armed with hammers to break the colored glass into fragments. The colored glass is obtained from the waste scraps purchased very cheap, at stained-glass manufactories.

Fl tation in the Woods.

Flirtation in the woods is always a more serious and impressive thing than in town. You'll see a couple come gradually together in a camp or at a hotel by the sea-de. As much as two or three days will elapse before any special affinity develops itself. Then you'll see the little attentions of a delicate nature; they segregate from parties, and, not too obviously; then they take to kind of devoting themselves to each other; then they get taking strolls alone, and the seriousness becomes imposing. The other campers or outcs are very respectful; a compact seems to exist that flirtation shall be respected. But the demure air they both put on is awfully funny.—San Franc eco Chronicle.

OFFICERS.

President—Mrs. R. A. Campbell.
First Vice President—Mrs. C. J. Strang.
Second Vice President—Mrs. J. T. Kirkpatrick
Third Vice President—Mrs. G. W. Jefferies.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. L. E. Modge.
Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. J. A. Hawkins.
Treasurer—Mrs. Ella Benson.

At the annual election of officers of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. R. A. Campbell, was elected president; Mrs. L. E. Modge, recording secretary; Mrs. J. A. Hawkins, corresponding secretary; Mrs. L. Benson, treasurer; Mrs. C. J. Strang, first vice president; Mrs. J. T. Kirkpatrick, second vice president; and Mrs. G. W. Jefferies, third vice president.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at Mrs. R. Suffield's on Friday at 2:30 p. m. SECRETARY.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. tendered Dr. Henry A. Reynolds an informal reception on Tuesday evening of this week, at the "Bridge Street" parlors, which proved a very pleasant social gathering, despite the forbidding storm. We are only sorry that the time was so short in which to notify the friends; presuming many may not have received the notice, who would like to have been present. We wish to say to any such, we did the best we could under the circumstances; asking all to notify their friends, and the ladies going out in the storm to be true. We learned during the evening that we were celebrating the Doctor's birthday,—so late that few present knew it. May this honored and fearless worker enjoy many returns of this anniversary day, and may the blessing of God continue to crown his efforts in the future as in the past.

Knowing Who to Kick.

The late Col. McClung of Mississippi once got into a dispute in the office of the Prentiss House at Vicksburg with a rowdy, when, to end the matter without further delay, he took the rowdy by the "nape of the neck," led him to the door, and kicked him into the street. The kicked picked himself up, walked away, and here the matter ended. Some weeks afterward McClung was in New Orleans, and, when, walking up St. Charles street, saw the fellow he had kicked out of the Prentiss House kicking a third party out of a drinking saloon. McClung walked up to his old acquaintance, once kicked, but now the kicker, and examining him closely, said: "Look here, my fine fellow, are you not the man I kicked out of the Prentiss House the other day?"

"Sotily, sotily, colonel," replied the rowdy, taking McClung by the arm, "don't mention it—I'm the man—but—you and I know who to kick."—New Orleans Picayune.

Card of Thanks.

The undersigned take this method of returning thanks to the many friends who so earnestly and materially aided myself and family during my late severe and painful sickness, and to especially acknowledge the skillful manner in which Dr. G. E. Sweetland relieved my fever, (typhoid) in four days, after it had run five weeks with unabated fury. My little daughter was stricken down by the same disease, and was as skillfully handled by Dr. S. as that of my own child. Some two years since, while laboring in a mill my clothing was caught by a shaft making 200 revolutions per minute, around which I was whirled until my stock-clothing was completely stripped from my person. This seriously cleared my brain, causing water to congregate between the skull and brain. This difficulty was removed and my mind restored by a process of blistering the head which is as unknown in its results as the method of curing fevers. This latter method is the origination of Mrs. Dr. Sweetland who administered the same. MARTIN BUTLER.

Charlevoix, Nov. 4th, 1886.

ED. JOURNAL:—Two weeks ago the sight of my right eye was completely obscured from paralysis. On the 4th inst. it was fully restored through the wonderful power of Mrs. Dr. Sweetland of this place. In justice to Mrs. Sweetland I state the fact through the columns of your paper. W. A. ATCHINSON.

For Tariff Reform.

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 11.—Hon. Frank Hurd arrived in this city to-day, and published in the Blade this evening a manifesto to the voters of this district. In speaking of the causes which led to his defeat he says: "I can say nothing more than I have heretofore said, except that in the future it will be difficult for certain persons claiming to be democrats to satisfy their party associates of their democracy when either secretly or openly they oppose the election of a regularly nominated democratic candidate for congress at a time when the fate of the party in the homes of representatives was hanging in the balance."

Prisoners Aboard the "Alabama."

From the account in the April Century, of the second officer commanding of the Alabama, of the cruise and combats of that vessel, we quote the following: "Among the many prizes we captured and destroyed, we necessarily saw many varieties of the genus homo in the crews of the Yankee skipper. While taking the burning of their ships very philosophically as among the fortunes of war, some came to remonstrate in forty regrettings of heavier losses. Upon one occasion, going aboard a fine ship, I told the captain he must go with us as his personal effects." He made a most lugubrious scene by earnestly appealing to me to grant him one request, that he might be permitted to take with him "Spurgeon's Sermons" and a keg of very fine whisky." The sermons I granted, but told him the whisky must go overboard. The prisoners on board we treated as a general practice were not put in irons, but were simply confined to an allotted space with a guard over them. The prisoners of the first half-dozen prizes taken were put in irons, including the captains and mates, at which the captains were very indignant, and remonstrated with Captain Semmes that their position should entitle them to different treatment. Captain Semmes replied that he confined them in irons in retaliation for the manner in which the agents of the U. S. Government had treated the purser of the C. S. steamer Sumter. The purser, under orders, was en route from Gibraltar to Cadiz in a French merchant steamer. Stopping at Tangier to put off and take on passengers and cargo, the purser walked on shore, and was there, in a neutral country, seized by the U. S. consul at the head of an armed force of Moorish soldiers, and brutally manhandled, with heavy manacles. From there he was taken in irons by the U. S. armed vessel Ino, and finally sent to New York in irons. The purser was a gentleman of unimpeachable character and high position. Again, there were occasions during the cruise when the measures of prisoners warranted placing them in irons, but never were exercised put in irons after that first measure of retaliation."

Mussel Shoes Down East.

The Rockland Courier-Gazette reports a new rival to the oyster which it thinks will bring fame and fortune to North Haven, where the discovery was made. It seems some enterprising citizen of that place, with an eye to developing home talent, conceived the idea of making an oyster stew without the oyster, substituting in the place of that bivalve some of the mussels with which the coast abounds. The result was a brilliant success. Such a stew had never been eaten before. Local epicures now turn up their noses at the oyster and vote it decidedly old-fashioned, and are preparing to impart their discovery to less enlightened regions. Their missionaries have already got as far as Rockland, and it is predicted that ere long the markets of all the big cities will abound with the legend "North Haven mussels—20 cents a quart." It is enough to make the elam turn green with envy.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

A RICH AFRICAN.

Tippu Tib the Greatest Slave and Ivory Trader in the World.

The wealthiest man in central Africa is now on his way to the Indian ocean in response to a letter from the sultan of Zanzibar requesting a visit from him. His name is Tippu Tib, and he lives not far from Nyangwe, the great trading point of many black tribes on the upper Congo. Readers of African books of travel have heard a good deal of Tippu Tib, and as recent years have greatly increased his power and wealth, we are likely to hear much of him.

Tippu Tib is only 45 years old, as black as coal, and of negroid blood, which means that he comes of an admixture of the coast tribes of east Africa and has also a very little Arab blood in his veins. He has been in central Africa for twenty-five years, and is to-day the greatest slave and ivory trader in the world. He has outstripped all his competitors through sheer force of intellect and strength of character. As long ago as the time when Cameron introduced him to our notice he visited Nyangwe and told the bullying Arab traders there that if they did not leave certain native allies of his alone it would be the worse for them. They took no time in pledging eternal peace with Tippu Tib and all his friends.

Cameron says Tippu Tib was the greatest dandy he saw among the traders of Africa, and that, although of negroid blood, he was a thorough Arab in manners and ideas. All his white visitors speak of the elegance of his Arab attire and of his courtly and affable bearing. Stanley says that at his first meeting with Tippu Tib he regarded him as the most remarkable man he had met among the Arabs, Wa Swahili, and half castes of Africa. Lieut. Van Gale, of the Congo state, who met Tippu Tib in January last, says he was surprised by the extent of his information on European topics. He was familiar with events occurring in Europe, and was particularly interested in the English, Germans, and Belgians. "The question he asked me," says Van Gale, "showed that he is neither an ignorant man nor one of ordinary mind." He said he intended some day to go to Europe, visit the king of the Belgians, and also spend some time in Constantinople.

In Tippu Tib's home, south of Nyangwe, Cameron says that large gangs of slaves walking about in chains met his eye at every turn. They were leading easy lives, were well fed, and he saw no acts of cruelty there. All had been victims, however, of the crying wrongs that are still decimating the simple savage of Africa. Few of Tippu Tib's slaves ever reach the Indian ocean. They are sold among the numerous tribes on the way to the sea. Long caravans, however, richly laden with his ivory, are often dispatched to the coast.

It was Tippu Tib who helped Stanley start down the Congo from Nyangwe, the point where both Livingstone and Cameron were defeated in their efforts to follow the river further. For some weeks Stanley's little party was augmented by over two hundred of Tippu Tib's men. Twenty very fine beauties from the great trader's harem accompanied him on this his first trip down the Congo, where he is now in absolute control of the river and adjoining territories for about 350 miles below Nyangwe. It was his slave pen near Stanley falls, in which twenty-five hundred wretched captives were found two years ago by the agents of the International association reached that point.

For many miles before these falls Stanley was chased by large fleets of canoes, and his party suffered severely from the lances and arrows of the most ferocious savages whom he met on the Congo. These natives are among the most peaceable on the Congo now, and one good reason is that they have no weapons to fight with. They have all been disarmed by Tippu Tib for a distance of about eighty miles along the river for daring to attack some of his men. Dr. Lenz, the explorer, wrote from Stanley falls in March just that the town falls and the Arawimi river the natives were incapable of making any resistance. "One can rarely find among them," he writes, "a lance or any other weapon except small knives." Dr. Lenz adds that "the influence of the opulent Tippu Tib is far greater in this region than that of the Free Congo state."

Tippu Tib has thus far maintained very amicable relations with the whites. He has invited missionaries to settle near him, and has promised them protection.—New York Sun.

Lawyer (to timid young woman) Have you ever appeared as witness in a suit before? Young woman (blushing) —Yes, sir, of course. Lawyer—Please state to the jury just what suit it was. Young woman (with more confidence) —It was a nun's veiling, shirred down the front and trimmed with a lovely drapery. Judge Court.—Kansas City Journal.

Proprietory Medicines.

A visit to Dr. Green's Laboratory, at Woodbury, N. J., has considerably changed our views, and especially our prejudices in regard to what are generally known as "Standard Patent Medicines." Of course we are getting to that age in life when we are forced to conclude Life Itself is a humbug, and naturally distrust anything that has not withstood long and tried experiences. Being a physician I had the curiosity to know how such a sale of two medical preparations could be sustained for so many years. The perfect system upon which the business is conducted, and the pharmaceutical arrangements for the manufacture of the two remedies with which we were made acquainted, are sufficiently convincing to us that the AYCOCT PILLS, for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints, and BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP, for throat and lung troubles, were of the compilation they are recommended, most excellent remedies, and only regret that in much of our practice, medical cities prevent us from prescribing them without making the formulas public. When we were shown the great quantity of voluntary letters having been forwarded Dr. Green, from all parts of the country, and from all classes of people, lawyers, ministers and doctors, giving a description of their ailments, testimonials of their cures, etc., I feel like recommend Dr. Green's magnanimous (but government accept such valuable formulas, and license them for general use by giving protection to the inventor same as patents generally.—Copied from N. Y. Druggists' Circular of Oct., 1886.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable success in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete), is never asked our to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world mark a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney and stomach disorders yield to this master of diseases and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says "That has been my last ache or pain." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial: It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Every Wood, and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance as The Tribune of New York. Men have been obliged to abandon their business, their political and overall training in the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Tribune. It is a "family newspaper" in the best sense, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an agricultural, a political, an art, a scientific, an amusement, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 12 full pages every issue, unfortunately. No matter what a person's religious, politics or profession may be, he matter what age of life he may be, a specimen copy of The Tribune will be sent to any one who asks for it, free and delighted. Our personal knowledge of this paper is more than we could do for years, or for thirty years the paper will be worth ten times its price to us. It is worth more than twice its price, its yearly subscription is $10.00, or less than 20 cents a week.

Address, The Independent, 251 Broadway, New York City.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the consumptive tendency of our people. It acts on a entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease seat in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purer healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when there comes a sudden change of appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A cent will continue one of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. 4cnt

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sell, druggist, Hippen, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters, as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris Texas by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corby who was so helpless he could not turn in bed or raise his head, everybody said he was dying of consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Feeling relief he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. Trial bottles of this great discovery for consumption free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla acts directly and promptly, purifying and invigorating the blood, improving the appetite, strengthening the nerves, and invigorating the system. It is, in the truest sense, an alterative medicine. Every invalid should give it a trial.

If people, troubled with colds, will take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral before retiring to church, they will avoid coughing. The Pectoral soothes and heals the irritated tissues, and controls all disposition to cough.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX — MICHIGAN.

Ex-President Arthur died this morning at 2 o'clock.

The Detroit Evening News has another libel suit on its hands, the Free Press Co. being the plaintiffs.

Wherever John Power spoke during the campaign the vote for him shows a marked increase. The testimony to the pursuasive power of his eloquence could not be rendered in a more gratifying manner.—Mining Journal.

Luce's majority in the upper peninsula will not exceed 3,000, according to a careful estimate based on returns already in, and covering the more heavily populated counties. This is 3,900 less than Algoe's majority in 1884.—Mining Journal.

The secretary of the treasury has issued a circular, offering to pay interest due Jan. 1,1887,(on funded loan of 1881) without relate(on presentation of the coupons. The effect of the circular will be to put about ten million dollars into the fall business, instead of holding it in the treasury until January.

President Cleveland has made a rule not to see visitors except upon purely official business and at the tri-weekly afternoon receptions. He proposes to devote his principle attention from now until congress meets, to the preparation of his annual message, and will not be bothered about appointments.

Postmaster Vilas's "campaign speech" proves to have been merely a few words addressed to his fellow townsmen, who called on him for a speech. He was not advertised, and did not take a deliberate and conspicuous part in any meeting, which is strikingly unlike the president's order means to forbid.—Detroit Journal.

In New York, Philadelphia, and other large eastern cities, the Knights of Labor are organizing for political campaign work. In Philadelphia they propose to make a fight on mayor in the spring. Their intention is to make certain demands, and if not granted by either of the other parties, they will effect a permanent organization for the campaign of 1888.

The Petoskey Record sticks its nose into Charlevoix politics, and says the election of Mr. Jerrue for sheriff is a public calamity. Please give us your reasons. In his own home (South Arm township) he is sufficiently well known and respected, as a business man and citizen, to have received 344 votes to 72 for Mr. Bechtel, while on the state ticket Mr. Yaple received 102 votes to 222 for Mr. Luce. Go to the Commercial house for dinner some day, and see if Mr. Jerrue is a public calamity.

It is worthy of note that of the delegation from Michigan in the fifteth congress, seven—Chipman, Allen, Ford, Brewer, Tarsney, Fischer, and Moffat—are natives of the state. This is the largest proportion of native congressmen that has been upon any of the delegations from the state. Michigan has turned her fifteth nine-post. She is getting along in years. Her sons are maturing and doing her great credit. Michigan's seven native congressmen and native United States senator, most of them born in the days when she was just emerging from the territorial condition, honor the state of their nativity.—Free Press.

THE VOTE FOR SENATE SENATOR.

We give below the vote for state senatorin this district at the recent election:

	Johnson Barton.
Antrim	596	856
Charlevoix	993	954
Grand Traverse	717	1,229
Leelanau	565	595
Manitou	79	25
Totals	2,862	3,659
Barton's majority		797

Francis's majority in the same counties in 1884 was 1,562.

REPUBLICAN CONFORT.

In an interview with a reporter of the Washington Star, last week, Don M. Dickinson expressed himself in regard to the late elections as follows:

"Don't you think it is significant, when the republicans claim it a great victory to barely pull through in Michigan, republican Michigan, when in the old time the state gave from 25,000 to 60,000 majority? Is it not significant that they make it a battle ground with their national forces, with Senators Sherman and Blair, Gov. Foraker and Representatives Boutelle, Reed, Hiscock and others on the stump, and with Blaine himself summoned? We make a purely domestic fight without a man or a cent from outside. The republican desperation and demoralization are shown, too, by their fusion with Knights of Labor, greenbackers and free traders in my district and elsewhere. Think of an alliance of the national bankers with Knights of Labor, of high protectionists with the rankest of free-traders, all this to retain 'republican' Michigan. On this fighting and with these measures their majority will not reach five per cent of the vote. We have made great breaches in the walls of their stronghold, the upper peninsula, and elsewhere. If we can do this against such a fight as they make, draw your own conclusions as to the republican judgment of their hold on Michigan, and of what we can do when we meet them with the means and strength in a canvass which they have pitted against us."

The "Off Year."

The country "has gone back" on every republican administration, except Lincoln's by electing in the middle of its term an opposition majority to the house. Johnson, Grant (second term), Hayes and Arthur, all had to face a hostile house, and even during Lincoln's term, the republican majority was reduced.

Before the war Van Buren, Tyler, Polk, Fillmore, Pierce and Buchanan likewise saw a hostile party majority in the middle of their terms. So that in securing even a majority, President Cleveland has proved an exception to all but Lincoln, and to Grant during his first term, and in both instances the southern democratic states were not fully represented. History warns the republicans not to bank much on the "off year" reaction and they are not doing so.

Barton's Election.

Barton is elected, as everybody supposed he would be. But he didn't get there on his individual merits. Scarcely. Had that been the issue, his defeat would have been overwhelming. But a United States senator was at stake, and this purely enabled Barton to siphon through. He, however, ran far behind his ticket, just as we predicted he would. His majority is something like a thousand less than that of his predecessor, and in contemplating these figures who can blame him for feeling as limp as a cotton shoe string? Nobody.—Enterprise.

Only 35 Cents

So confident are we that Dr. Pete's 35 cent Cough Cure will not disappoint the most sanguine expectation of a single bottle sold, that we invite invalids, that we warrant it. Had we not the most perfect confidence in its virtues we would not think of selling it as we do. Sold by Perry Weed and F. G. W. Crouter.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last Fourth of July, I attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposure, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough then followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Wheeler, Fairbury, Ill. L.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting alarming and obstinate symptoms. My friends all agreed that the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a speedy and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Mendville, Pa.

Some time ago I took a slight Cold which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. These symptoms continued for some time, growing in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Marysville, Ark.

TEN YEARS AGO, on December 26th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling conviction of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in the actual attainment of such a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day,—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers at two cents a copy. Mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for six dollars a year. Address The Chicago Daily News, Chicago, Ill.

The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS—8 pages, 64 columns—is the largest dollar weekly in America.

PATENTS

After Forty years' experience, the Proprietors of this Journal still continue to secure Patents for Inventions. Thousand applications for Hundred Patents have been secured through our agency. Patents are secured by us in the United States and Foreign countries. Our facilities are unsurpassed and our fees are moderate. Inventors who need to consult us about their inventions, can do so by mail, and we will inform them whether their inventions are patentable or not, free of charge. Our fees are not due until patent is secured. We refer to officials in the Patent Office to whom we have by permission, given the name of our clients. Patents obtained through us are noticed in the Scientific American, the largest and most widely circulated paper of its class. It is not a question of how much money can be made by an invention, but how much can be made without it. This is true and especially illustrated in the business of manufacturing Ayer's Pills, and is equally applicable to every other manufacture. Inventors who need to employ agents should see that the agents are not paid more than the services rendered are worth. This is the rule we follow. Our business is conducted so as to secure the greatest possible number of patents at the least possible cost. Our mode of procuring patents is fully explained in our pamphlet, which we will send free to any address. It contains the names of several prominent men in various parts of the country who have received patents through our agency, with the cost of each, and such other information as may be useful to inventors. Information as to patent with to obtain a patent, address, MUNN & CO., Publishers of the Scientific American, Office, 37 Park Row, New York.

Splendid weather at present.

A man was cutting down a hollow tree the other day, and in refering to it he said he was cutting the hollow down, and justifies himself in saying so by refering to some of our writers who call building a chimney building a flue.

For Tariff Reform.

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 11.—Hon. Frank Hurd arrived in this city to-day, and published in the Bee this evening a manifesto to the voters of this district. In speaking of the causes which led to his defeat he says: "I can say nothing more than I have heretofore said, except that in the future it will be difficult for certain persons claiming to be democrats to satisfy their party associates of their democracy when either secretly or openly they oppose the election of a regularly nominated democratic candidate for congress at a time when the fate of the party in the house of representatives was hanging in the balance."

In regard to making Toledo his permanent home, he remarks:

"I came to this city nearly twenty years ago with the intention of making it my home, and never have had any other than this since the close of my first congressional term. I have not engaged in the active practice of my profession here during three congressional terms and part of a fourth. I have been absent in Washington the most of the time on public business. That I have not been without service to Toledo while so absent is shown by the carrying through of the measure to deepen the old channel to sixteen feet, by the inauguration of the straight channel enterprise, by the establishment of the United States court here and by the construction of the new federal building. I expect to return to Toledo and resume the practice of my profession here. The absence which my business occasions do not in the least affect my residence in Toledo.

On his favorite subject, tariff reform, he branches out by saying: "The condition of tariff reform was never better in this district. There are more earnest, determined tariff reformers in this district than ever before. The association in the state is engaged in the work, thoroughly organized. New quarters, slightly located, will be established. Books and documents will be distributed. The advantages of a reading room will be furnished. Addresses will be delivered during the coming winter by Speaker Carlisle, Colonel Morrison, Professor Sumner, Henry George, Henry Ward Beecher, Richard O'Gorman and others. Arrangements are nearly completed to begin the publication here of a weekly journal, which it is designed to make a national organ of tariff reform. The organization has already commenced, and will be by wards, precincts, and townships, and will be the most thorough and complete organization ever made in the United States."

Prisoners Aboard the "Alabama."

From the account in the April Century, of the shoreof officer in command of the Alabama, of the cruise and combat of that vessel, we quote the following: "Among the many prizes we captured and destroyed, we necessarily saw many varieties of the great house in the game of the Yankee skipper. While taking the burning of their ships very philosophically as among the fortunes of war, some clung to cruising comfortably regardless of heavier losses. Upon one occasion, going aboard a fine ship, I told the captain he might be packing away his personal effects. He made a most indecorous scene by earnestly appealing to me to grant him one request, that he might be permitted to take with him "Spurgeon's Sermons" and a "little very little whisky." The sermons I granted, but not the whisky, for fear of a go overboard. The prisoners on board of the Alabama as a general practice were not put in irons, but were simply confined to an allotted space with a guard over them. The prisoners of the first halfdozen prizes taken were put in irons, including the captain and mate, at which the captains were very indignant, and remonstrated with Captain Semmes that their position should entitle them to different treatment. Captain Semmes replied that he continued them in irons in retaliation for the manner in which the agents of the U. S. Government had treated the purser of the C. S. steamer Sumter. The purser, under orders, was en route from Gibraltar to Cadiz in a French merchant steamer. Stopping at Tangier to put off and take on passengers and cargo, the purser walked on shore, and was there, in a neutral country, seized by the U. S. consul at the hand of an armed force of Moorish soldiers, and brutally imprisoned, with heavy manacles. From there he was taken in irons by the U. S. armed vessel Iowa and finally sent to New York in irons. The purser was a gentleman of unimpeachable character and high position. Again, there were occasions during the cruise when the number of prisoners warranted placing some in irons, but never were captains put in irons after that first measure of retaliation."

Mussel Stews Down East.

The Rockland Courier-Gazette reports a new rival to the oyster which it thinks will bring fame if not fortune to North Haven, where the discovery was made. It seems some enterprising citizens of that place, with an eye to developing home talent, conceived the idea of making an oyster stew without the oyster, substituting in the place of that bivalve some of the mussels with which the coast abounds. The result was a brilliant success. Such a stew had never been eaten before. Local epicures now turn up their noses at the oyster and vote it decidedly old-fashioned, and are preparing to impart their discovery to the conglomerate regions. Their missionaries have already got as far as Rockland, and it is predicted that ere long the markets of all the big cities will abound with the legend "North Haven mussels—20 cents a quart." It is enough to make the elms turn green with envy.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

A RICH AFRICAN.

Tippu Tib the Greatest Slave and Ivory Trader in the World.

The wealthiest man in central Africa is now on his way to the Indian ocean in response to a letter from the sultan of Zanzibar requesting a visit from him. His name is Tippu Tib, and he lives not far from Nyangwe, the great trading point of many black tribes on the upper Congo. Readers of African books of travel have heard a good deal of Tippu Tib, and as recent years have greatly increased his power and wealth, we are likely to hear much of him.

Tippu Tib is only 45 years old, as black as coal, and of negroid blood, which means that he comes of an admixture of the coast tribes of east Africa and has also a very little Arab blood in his veins. He has been in central Africa for twenty-five years, and is to-day the greatest slave and ivory trader in the world. He has outstripped all his competitors through sheer force of intellect and strength of character. As long ago as the time when Cameron interviewed him to our notice he visited Nyangwe and told the bullying Arab traders there that if they did not leave certain native villes of his alone it would be the worse for them. They had not time to plead any eternal peace with Tippu Tib and all his friends.

Cameron says Tippu Tib was the greatest dandy he saw among the tribes of Africa, and that, although of negroid blood, he was a thorough Arab in manners and ideas. All his white visitors speak of the elegance of his Arab attire and of his courtly and affable bearing. Stanley says that at his first meeting with Tippu Tib he regarded him as the most remarkable man he had met among the Arabs, Wa Swahili, and half castes of Africa.

Van Gale, of the Congo state, writes that Tippu Tib in January last, says he was surprised by the extent of his information on European topics. He was familiar with events occurring in Europe, and was particularly interested in the English, Germans, and Belgians. "The questions he asked me," says Van Gale, "showed that he is neither an ignorant man nor one of ordinary mind." He said he intended some day to go to Europe, visit the king of the Belgians, and also spend some time in Constantinople.

In Tippu Tib's home, south of Nyangwe, Cameron says that large gangs of slaves walking about in chains met his eyes at every turn. They were leading easy lives, were well fed, and he saw no acts of cruelty there. All had been victims, however, of the crying wrongs that are still decimating the simple savages of Africa. They had been snapped in their peaceful homes by the sudden onslaught of Tippu Tib's ruthless soldier slaves, who had burned their huts, killed their friends, and dragged them off into captivity. Tippu Tib is the most noted representative of those men who are to-day inflicting more suffering upon their fellow-creatures than any other organization. The professional slave traders of Africa. Few of tippu Tib's slaves ever reach the Indian ocean. They are sold among the numerous tribes on the way to the sea. Long caravans, however, richly laden with his ivory, are often dispatched to the coast.

It was Tippu Tib who helped Stanley start down the Congo from Nyangwe, the point where both Livingstone and Cameron were defeated in their efforts to follow the river further. For some weeks Stanley's little party was supported by over two hundred of Tippu Tib's men. Twenty very dark beauties from the great trader's harem accompanied him on this his first trip down the Congo, where he is now in absolute control of the river and adjoining territories for about 350 miles below Nyangwe. It was his slave pen near Stanley falls, in which twenty-five hundred wretched captives were found two years ago when the agents of the International association reached that point.

For many miles below those falls Stanley was chased by large fleets of canoes, and his party suffered severely from the lances and arrows of the most ferocious savages whom he met on the Congo. These natives are among the most peaceable on the Congo now, and one good reason is that they have no weapons to fight with. They have all been disarmed by Tippu Tib for a distance of about eighty miles along the river for daring to attack some of his men. Dr. Lenz, the explorer, wrote from Stanley falls in March last that between the falls and the Arawimi river the natives were incapable of making any resistance. "One can rarely find among them," he writes, "a knife or any other weapon except small knives." Dr. Lenz adds that "the influence of the opulent Tippu Tib is far greater all through this region than that of the Free Congo state."

Tippu Tib has thus far maintained very amicable relations with the whites. He has invited missionaries to settle among them, and has promised them protection.—New York Sun.

Lawyer (to timid young woman)—Have you ever appeared as witness in a suit before? Young woman (blushing)—Yes, sir, of course. Lawyer—Please state to the jury just what suit it was. Young woman (with more confidence) —It was a nun's veiling, shirred down the front and trimmed with a lovely blue, with bias ruchings and a capping nicely arranged. Order in the court.—Kansas City Journal.

Proprietary Medicines.

A visit to Dr. Green's laboratory, at Woodbury, N. J., has considerably changed our views, and especially our prejudices in regard to what are generally known as "Patented Patent Medicines." Of course we are getting to that age in life when we are forced to conclude Life itself is a humbug, and naturally distrust anything that has not withstood long and tried experience. Being a physician I had the curiosity to know how such a sale of two medical preparations could be sustained for so many years. The perfect system upon which the business is conducted, and the pharmaceutical arrangements for the manufacture of the two recipes with which we were made acquainted, are sufficiently convincing to us that the AYGOFF FLOWER, for Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints, and BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP, for Throat and lung troubles, were for the complaints they are recommended, most excellent remedies, and only regret that in much of our practice, medical ethics prevent us from prescribing them without making the formulas public. When we were shown the great quantity of voluntary letters having been forwarded Dr. Green, from all parts of the country, and from all classes of people, lawyers, ministers and doctors, giving a description of their ailments, testimonials of their cures, etc., I feel like endorsing Dr. Green's suggestion that the government accept such valuable formulas, and transfer them for general use by giving protection to the inventor same as patents generally.—Copied from N. Y. Druggists' Circular of Oct., 1886.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without making a question. His success is phenomenal. His precision marvelous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world mark a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial! It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed, and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family weekly and especially our friends who, for instance are generally known as "Patented Patent Medicines." Of course we are getting to that age in life when we are forced to conclude Life itself is a humbug, and naturally distrust anything that has not withstood long and tried experience. What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup when a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual preparations given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. F. Sell, druggist, Hippam, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters, as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris Texas by the remarkable recovery of M. J. E. Corley who was so helpless he could not turn in bed or raise his head, everybody said he was dying of consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. Trial bottles of this great discovery for consumption free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's.

Wherever John Power spoke during the campaign the vote for him shows a marked increase. The testimony to the persuasive power of his eloquence could not be rendered in a more gratifying manner.—Mining Journal.

Luce's majority in the upper peninsula will not exceed 3,000, according to a careful estimate based on returns already in, and covering the more heavily populated counties. This is 2,500 less than Alger's majority in 1884.—Mining Journal.

The secretary of the treasury has issued a circular, offering to pay interest due Jan. 1, 1887, on funded loan of 1891 without relative presentation of the coupons. The effect of the circular will be to put about ten million dollars into the full business, instead of holding it in the treasury until January.

President Cleveland has made a rule not to see visitors except upon purely official business and at the tri-weekly afternoon receptions. He proposes to devote his principle attention from now until congress meets, to the preparation of his annual message, and will not be bothered about appointments.

Postmaster Vilas's "campaign speech" proves to have been merely a few words addressed to his fellow townsmen, who called on him for a speech. He was not advertised, and did not take a deliberate and conspicuous part in any meeting, which is undoubtedly what the president's order means to forbid.—Detroit Journal.

In New York, Philadelphia, and other large eastern cities, the Knights of Labor are organizing for political campaign work. In Philadelphia they propose to make a fight on mayor in the spring. Their intention is to make certain demands, and if not granted by either of the other parties, they will effect a permanent organization for the campaign of 1888.

The Petoskey Record sticks its nose into Charlevoix politics, and says the election of Mr. Jerrne for sheriff is a public calamity. Please give us your reasons. In his own house (South Arm township) he is sufficiently well known and respected, as a business man and citizen, to have received 344 votes to 79 for Mr. Bentley, while on the state ticket Mr. Yaple received 103 votes to 225 for Mr. Luce. Go to the commercial house for dinner some day, and see if Mr. Jerrne is a public calamity.

It is worthy of note that of the delegation from Michigan in the 49th congress, seven—Chipman, Allen, Ford, Brewer, Tarsney, Fisher, and Moffat—are natives of the state. This is the largest proportion of native congressmen that has been upon any of the delegations from the state. Michigan has turned her fifteen milepost. She is getting along in years. THE VOTE FOR STATE SENATOR.

We give below the vote for state senatorin this district at the recent election:

	Johnson.	Barton.
Antrim	596	856
Charlevoix	565	951
Grand Traverse	717	1,229
Leelanau	595	536
Manitou	79	25
Totals	2,552	3,639
Barton's majority		1,087

Francis's majority in the same counties in 1884 was 1,942.

REPUBLICAN CONFIDENCE.

In an interview with a reporter of the Washington Star, last week, Don M. Dickinson expressed himself in regard to the late elections as follows:

"Don't you think it is significant, when the republicans claim it is a great victory to barely pull through in Michigan, republican Michigan, when in the old time the state gave from 25,000 to 60,000 majority? Is it not significant that they make it a battle ground with their national forces, with Senators Sherman and Blair, Gov. Foraker and Representatives Bontelle, Reed, Hiscock and others on the stump, and with Blaine himself summoned? We make a puney domestic fight without a man or a cent from outside. The republican desperation and demoralization are shown, too, by their fusion with Knights of Labor, greenbackers and free traders in my district and elsewhere. Think of an alliance of the national bankers with Knights of Labor, of high protectionists with the rankest of free-traders, all this to retain 'republican' Michigan. On this fighting and with these measures their majority will not reach five percent of the vote. We have made great breaches in the walls of their stronghold, the upper peninsula, and elsewhere. If we can do this against such a fight as they made, draw over our own concessions as to the republican judgment of their hold on Michigan, and of what we can do when we meet them with half the means and strength in a canvass which they have pitted against us."

The "Off Year."

The country "has gone back" on every republican administration, except Lincoln's by electing in the middle of its term an opposition majority to the house. Johnson, Grant (second term), Hayes and Arthur, all had to face a hostile house, and even during Lincoln's term, the republican majority was reduced.

Before the war Van Buren, Tyler, Polk, Pillmore, Pierce and Buchanan likewise saw a hostile party majority in the middle of their terms. So that in securing even a majority, President Cleveland has proved an exception to all but Lincoln, and to Grant during his first term, and in both instances the southern democratic states were not fully represented. History warns the republicans not to look much on the "off year" reaction and they are not doing so.

Barton's Election.

Barton is elected, as everybody supposed he would be. But he didn't get there on his individual merits. Scarcely. Had that been the issue, his defeat would have been overwhelming. But a United States senator was at stake, and this barely enabled Barton to squeeze through. He, however, ran far behind his ticket.

TEN YEARS AGO, on December 26th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling conviction of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in the actual attainment of so high a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day,—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers at two cents per copy. Mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for six dollars per year, or for a quarter (two cents a copy) for one month. Address Victor F. Lawson, Publisher The DAILY NEWS, 123 Fifth Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

The CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS—8 pages, 64 columns—is the largest dollar weekly in America.

So confident are we that Dr. Peter's 25 cent cough cure will not disappoint the most critical, we guarantee it, if a single bottle taken according to directions, fails to give satisfaction, the money will be refunded, that we warrant it. A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the immediate and early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposure, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Wooster, Fawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which subsequently developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a speedy and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe cold which settled on my lungs. I resorted to various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have recommended it to my children, and to others.—

for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Mendville, Pa.

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. My friends knew no hope considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the ONE great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

PAINTS

After Forty years' experience of more than One Hundred Thousand applications, the Proprietors of the Scientific American, and the public generally, know that the Gold Medal Paint, for the United States, Wins the Palm against the World. Its Durability, Beauty, and Economy, are unsurpassed, and their facilities are unsurpassed by any.

Practical and disinterested reports, read to the Patent Office on about another, proved that the Gold Medal Paint maintained its gloss and showed no chalking after exposure to the weather, while other paints had chalked and lost gloss.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, the acknowledged authority, after a long trial, gave the preference of its recommendation to the Gold Medal Paint, and ordered it painted on its own building.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, the most widely circulated and most influential of all publications of its class, in its issue of Dec. 18, 1886, publishes a long article, with illustrations, on the Gold Medal Paint, and concludes with the following: "Our readers will remember that we have on several occasions given our opinion that the Gold Medal Paint is the best paint we know of, and we see no reason to change our opinion."

The Gold Medal Paint is a ready mixed paint, of the highest quality, and is sold by the gallon, at $1.50 per gallon, in any quantity, in any color, and is warranted to last five years in any climate. It covers one gallon to three yards of ordinary fence boards, and proportionately more than inferior paints. It is the most economical paint, because it covers more surface than any other paint, and because it lasts much longer than any other paint.

The Gold Medal Paint is put up in 1 gallon, 1/2 gallon, and 1/4 gallon tin cans, and in 5 gallon and 10 gallon kegs, and is sold by the gallon only.

☞The tug Leviathan returned to Cheboygan, last Friday, with the outfit of the schooner Lafriniere, including chains, anchors, sails, running gear and standing rigging left intact on the fore and mainmast. Parties from Beaver Island had partly stripped the vessel and were about to make another raid when the tug arrived at the Beavers and demanded the property, which was immediately handed over. The vessel's stern to mainmast is gone. She is a total wreck.

A father can give his young son no better present than a year's reading of the Scientific American. Its contents will lead the young mind in the path of thought, and if he treads there a while, he'll forget frivolous and be of same account, and if he has an inventive or mechanical turn of mind, this paper will afford him more entertainments, as well as useful information, than he can obtain elsewhere. Historical Society.

On the evening of the 12th inst., about thirty-five of the Charlevoix county pioneers met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lovell Jordan, of Jordan, forming together with some of the East Jordan friends, a very pleasant and congenial company of over fifty.

Refreshments were served in abundance, and the program presented several attractive numbers. The entertainment was introduced by an instrumental solo by Mrs. Ella Smith, worthy in itself and gracefully rendered.

Selections from Mecanlay upon "The Earl of Chathum" were read by the Hon. John Nicholls, giving a full account of Pitt's career as a statesman.

The paper by Miss Ina M. Gage upon "The Character of Evangeline," was very complete, showing a clear knowledge of the subject combined with literary skill.

The musical numbers were all noteworthy, including a quartette, "True Her Not," by Mrs. Hines, Mrs. Clark, Dr. Carleton, and Mr. Frank Cramer; a piano and violin duet by Mr. and Miss Lowsley, and a vocal duet by Mrs. Clark and Dr. Carleton; Miss Cochran acting as accompanist.

Many short speeches were indulged in, all very complimentary to the host and family, and to the town in which they resided.

After closing "Auld Lang Syne," the company departed, feeling that the fates had indeed been propitious in granting them such a pleasant occasion.

The society will meet at the residence of W. A. Brown on Friday evening, Nov. 19. The program will include, besides vocal and instrumental music, a paper by Prof. Enos, a reading by Mrs. Washburn, and a vote by the society on the question, "Who is the greatest living poet?"

Circuit Court.

Circuit court opened at Boyne City Tuesday morning, with twenty cases on the docket, most of which were announced as ready for trial on the call of the calendar.

The case of the people against Ed. Graham and Wm. Moore, charging the defendants with the murder of Geo. Optegeele, in August, 1885, a nolle prosequi was entered by the people.

The case of the people against Thomas Smith, charging Smith with the murder of Niles Anderson, August 18th, last, was the first case called for trial. After calling fifty eight jurors, the following panel was selected to try the case, and sworn in Tuesday morning: William H. Chappell, Levi McCarty, Warren W. Whitman, Oscar Ellis, Melvill Walton, Martin Wheeler, Jesse Sanford, Edward Krouse, King J. Severance, James S. Walton, John Jones, William Baker. The prosecution opened the case at nine o'clock yesterday morning.

At the request of Mr. Corbet, Messrs. Norton & Kent were appointed by the court to assist in the prosecution. Cruickshank & Grier and E. S. Pratt conducting the defense. The case will probably last the most of the week.

A Well-Trained Actress.

When she appeared last April at Her Majesty's theater the difference between the Sarah Bernhardt of to-day and the Sarah Bernhardt of ten years ago were scarcely greater than the mere lapse of time must have caused even had she sympathetically husbanded her resources. If she is no longer the silver-tongued sylph whose nameless charm of speech and movement still haunts us at the mention of "Le Sphinx" or "La Fille de Roland," that is merely because of the most perfect of conservatrices can not perpetuate the secret of eternal youth. All the essentials of her talent she retains without impairment. If she puts them to less exquisite use than heretofore, exercising nobility of pose to restless vividness of gesture, purity of diction to ingenious elocutionary effect-seeking, that is the fault of the plays in which she appears. She has the old means at command, and she uses them with her old mastery, though sometimes to less worthy ends. What, then, has given her this power of yesteryear undegraded through all the influences that make for degradation? What talisman has saved her voice from becoming coarse, her gait from hardening into mechanism, and her passion from habitually rushing into rant? Simply, I believe, the lessons of a thorough training, an early and systematic mastery of the methods of her craft. It is one of the characteristics of physical accomplishment—and the qualities which can be acquired by training are mainly physical—that it is even more difficult to unlearn than to learn. A great swimmer, a good skater, a good cricketer may by sheer disuse decline in actual power, but he will never lose his form and swim, skate, or toss like one untrained or ill-trained in these exercises. Similarly an actress who has once learned to move gracefully and speak beautifully will retain these distinctions in spite of her parts and long runs and boisterous audiences and England and America—in spite of all the circumstances, in short, that tend to produce crudity and commonness.—The National Review.

Republican Cowardice.

The story is being industriously circulated by republican campaign orators and through private letters that leading members of the W. C. T. U. and its president Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, "lobbied" to prevent the passage of the bill for submission. At first the story seemed too absurd for serious treatment, but so important does it appear to "our friends, the enemy," that we feel called upon to make a reply. For the W. C. T. U. officially I wish to deny it. The organization is and has been unqualifiedly for constitutional prohibition. The women, in seeking this end, have literally walked hundreds of miles to gath er the great petitions which went before the legislature in the two sessions previous to 1884-5. When the last legislature assembled the workers of the local unions objected to further petition work. They said, "Our memorial will only go again into the waste-basket as in former years." So there was none of that general work done. To say that "lobby" influence came from the organization is utterly false. The following was the action of that year and is a matter of record not only in the minutes of the state union but on pages of the legislative journal.

To the Honorable, the Senate, and House of Representatives in the State of Michigan.

We gratefully note the fact that the bill providing that the question of constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic shall be submitted to the people of Michigan at the next general election has been taken from the table and brought before your honorable body. We, the officers of the woman's christian temperance union, representing more than 5,000 of the women of Michigan, hereby petition for the passage of the bill.

1. Because we believe that prohibition put by the will of the state in the organic law of the state is the only adequate remedy for an evil so great.

2. The people have the right to defend themselves an the baleful hot from a system which wounds mortally destroys physically, hardens financially, and blasts the righteous power of the government under which they live.

Your petitioners also pray that a joint resolution be framed requesting the Michigan representation in congress of the United States to vote and use their influence for the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors whenever this question comes into the realm of the national legislature.

For the State Women's Christian Temperance Union.

MARY T. LATHRAP, Pres.
JULIA A. WYKES, Cor. Sec'y.
JULIA A. UPTON,
Supt. Legislation and Petitions.

This memorial was handsomely received; spread upon the journal, on motion of Senator Bellaire.

For myself personally I desire to make a denial as unqualified as for the organization. No member of the legislature can truthfully say that I sought him for the purpose of using influence in any way or uttered a word against the passage of the bill. I was absent from the state until after the bill had passed the house and knew very little of the measure to that point. When it was pending in the senate it was well known that if that body came to the same action as the house it would be at a date only one month before the spring election of 1885, and that no prejudice was to be given for a campaign before the great question came to the polls.

Some of the officers of the W. C. T. U. proposed that protest be made against the date for the vote, but such protest was never made, because it was feared that it might be used as an excuse for failing to beat at the capitol the pledge made at the republican convention. The memorial above quoted was the only action and spoke the honest sentiment of officers and members of the union.

Upon the matter of imperiling the cause of prohibition by forcing it upon the unprepared people, I did express my opinion on two or three occasions. I believe the date of submission was in favor of the liquor traffic, instead of the people and that it was the duty of our legislators to guard the people, instead of the saloon. But to say that such expression of opinion under the circumstances made, was intended to influence any vote on submission or that it produced that effect has all the intent and color of falsehood. Some of the gentlemen using it know this to be a fact and are, therefore, culable; others pass it along as part of the campaign stock and are less guilty.

If the uttermost statements are true it does not help the republican party. The prohibitionists are seeking to bring the question to the people for settlement. If the legislature forced to the verge of doing the people's work, instead of the saloon's, and had determined to use such methods as to endanger the main question, the prohibition party and the W. C. T. U. could consistently have made protest; but they did not make it.

The prohibition party convention at Lansing that spring fabled a resolution which related to the date fixed for the vote, and unqualifiedly asked for submission when they knew the burden and expense of the brief campaign would be upon them.

If it were true that a woman's "lobbying" so influenced the action of a great party that they now feel called upon to apologize to the people for such action they might have redeemed themselves at Grand Rapids, come out square, for submission and thus gone to the people without any such weak apology for a great cowardice.

MARY T. LATHRAP,
President of Michigan W. C. T. U.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Cold Glittering Facts."

The Sentinel, in responding to a toast, "The press," given at the reception of Dr. Reynolds, at the Bridge Street house, on Tuesday evening of last week, says, "It is a cold glittering fact that the leader of the W. C. T. U. in Michigan, lobbied against the submission of the prohibitory amendment in the last legislature," which she says is an absolute falsehood

Now for some cold glittering facts that will refute the cold glittering falsehoods made by the Sentinel, in response to the above toast. It is a cold glittering fact that Dan Jerrne received some 280 republican votes, while Mr. Sheldon received but 180 prohibition votes. It is a cold glittering fact that Mr. Jerdan and Mr. Jerrne each received four hundred prohibition tickets, in Charlevoix. It is a cold glittering fact that four years ago this winter, the republican majority in the legislature was nearly one two thirds, and that they refused after being petitioned from all parts of the state to submit the amendment of the constitution to a vote of the people. It is a cold glittering fact, that within two to one more states enjoying enforced prohibitory laws under democratic rule than under republican rule. It is a cold glittering fact, that the republican party has repealed all the prohibition laws we ever had in this state. It is a cold glittering fact, that the excess prohibition gain this year, over the vote of two years ago, came from the democrat and greenback parties, instead of the republican party. So much for the aid given to the democrats.

It is a cold glittering fact, that the prohibition party has come to stay, and don't you forget it.

PROHIBITION VOTER.

Kind Words.

"Excuse me, will reply to-morrow when I go to press," were the words of Mr. Parmelee at the reception of Dr. Reynolds, in Charlevoix. Mr. Parmelee was not only unkind and unjournalistic in his reply but insulted every lady and gentlemen present when he infers that the W. C. T. U. will aid in running a third party as loon and as a democratic aid society for be it remembered, the W. C. T. U. are Prohibitionists. Mr. Parmelee, better sentiments were expected of you, as it is universally conceded that you are the brains of the Sentinel. Should I be laboring under misapprehension; would say in your behalf; it would be preposterous for man to undertake what your Creator has failed in; but if you will maintain your dignity as a journalist, and train with the prohibition element of Charlevoix, there's a faint hope of your gaining the respect and esteem of those whom you so grossly insulted. Let me ask who has the power to grant a license for a third saloon?

The above Eyeglass invented by the Johnson Optical Co., of Detroit, Mich., contains the following features of all others:

1st. The lenses can be placed in position so that the eye-lashes will not touch them, a thing not always easy to do with other eyeglasses.

2d. The guards are so set as to clasp the nose firmly on the bone, which prevents slipping and falling off.

3d. The pressure is on the fleshy part of the nose above the bone, which prevents irritation.

4th. The lever feature secures its perfect adjustment to the nose whether it be high or low.

5th. The lenses are set at right angles to line of vision.

6th. They can be worn safely without cord or chain as there is no danger of falling off.

7th. We warrant them to be the easiest eyeglass in the market.

Historical Society.

On the evening of last week inst., about thirty-five of the Charlevoix people met at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Loveday, of East Jordan, forming together with some of the East Jordan friends, a very pleasant and congenial company of over fifty.

Refreshments were served in alternate courses, and the program presented several attractive numbers. The musical entertainment was introduced by an instrumental solo by Mrs. Ella Smith, worthy in itself and gracefully rendered.

Selections from Macaulay upon "The Earl of Chatham" were read by the Hon. John Nicholls, giving a full account of Pitt's career as a statesman.

Also paper by Miss Ina M. Gage upon "The Character of Evangeline," was very complete, showing a clear knowledge of the subject combined with literary skill.

The musical numbers were all noteworthy, including a quartette, "Trust Her Not," by Mrs. Hines, Mrs. Clark, Dr. Carleton, and Mr. Frank Crain; a piano and violin duet by Mr. and Mrs. Loveday, and a vocal duet by Mrs. Clark and Dr. Carleton; Miss Cochran acting as accompanist.

Many short speeches were indulged in, all very complimentary to the host and family, and to the town in which they reside.

After singing "Auld Lang Syne," the company departed, feeling that the fates had indeed been propitious in granting them such a pleasant occasion.

The society will meet at the residence of W. A. Brown on Friday evening, Nov. 19. The program will include, besides vocal and instrumental music, a paper by Prof. Jones, a reading by Miss Washburn, and a lecture by the society on the question, "Who is the greatest living poet?"

Circuit Court.

Circuit court opened at Boyne City Tuesday morning, with twenty cases on the docket, most of which are announced as ready for trial on the roll of the calendar.

In the case of the people against Ed Graham and Wm. Moore, charge of the defendants with the murder of Geo. Optegozie, in August, 1885, a nolle prosequi was entered by the people.

The case of the people against Thomas Smith, charging Smith with the murder of Niles Anderson, August 18th, last, was the first case called for trial. After calling fifty-eight jurors, the following panel was selected to try the case, and sworn in Tuesday morning: William H. Clapsil, Levi McCarty, Warren W. Whitman, Oscar Ellis, Melvill Walloo, Martin Wheeler, Jesse Sanford, Edward Krause, King J. Sawrence, James S. Walton, John Jones, William Baker. The prosecution opened the case at nine o'clock yesterday morning.

At the request of Mr. Corbet, Messrs. Norton & Kost were appointed by the court to assist in the prosecution. Crutchshank & Grier and E. S. Pratt conducted the defense. The case will probably last the most of the week.

A Well-Trained Actress.

When she appeared last April at Her Majesty's theater the difference between the Sarah Bernhardt of to-day and the Sarah Bernhardt of ten years ago were scarcely greater than the mere lapse of that time must have caused over bad sin scrupulously husbanded her resources. If she is no longer the silver-tongued sylph whose harmonious chorus of speech and movement still haunts us at the mention of "La Sibilante" or "La Fille de Roland," that is merely because of the most perfect of conservatoires can not impart the secret of eternal youth. All the essentials of her talent she retains well-nigh unimpaired. If she puts them to less exquisite use than heretofore, sacrificing nobility of pose to restless vividness of gesture, purity of diction to ingenious elocutionary effect-seeking, that is the fault of the place in which she appears. She has the old means at her command, and she uses them with her old mastery, though sometimes to less worthy ends. What, then, has given her this power of passing unimpaired through all the influences that make for degradation? What talisman has saved her voice from becoming coarse, her grace from hardening into mechanism, and her passion from habitually rushing into rant? Simply, I believe, the talesman of a thorough training, an early and systematic mastery of the methods of her craft. It is one of the characteristics of physical accomplishments—and the qualities which can be acquired by training are mainly physical—that it is even more difficult to unlearn than to learn. A good swimmer, a good skater, a good cricketer may by sheer disuse decline in actual power, but he will never lose his form and swim, skate, or bowl like one untrained or ill-trained in these exercises. Similarly an actress who has once learned to move gracefully and speak beautifully will retain these distinctions in spite of star parts and long runs and boisterous audiences and England and America—in spite of all the circumstances, in short, that tend to produce crudity and commonness.—The National Review.

Republican Cowardice.

The story is being industriously circulated by republican campaign orators and through private letters that leading members of the W. C. T. U. and its president Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, "lobbied" to prevent the passage of the bill for submission. At first the story seemed too absurd for serious treatment, but as important does it appear to "our friends, the enemy," that we feel called upon to make a reply. For the W. C. T. U. officially I wish to deny it. The organization is and has been unquestionably for constitutional prohibition. The woman, in seeking this end, have literally walked hundreds of miles to gather the great petitions which went before the legislature in the two sessions previous to 1884-5. When the last legislature assembled the workers of the local unions objected to further petition work. They said, "Our memorial will only go again into the waste-basket as in former years." So there was none of that general work done. To say that "lobby" influence came from the organization is utterly false. The following was the action of this year and in a matter of record not only in the minutes of the state union but on pages of the legislative journal:

To the Honorable, the Senate, and House of Representatives in the State of Michigan:

We gratefully note the fact that the bill providing that the question of constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic shall be submitted to the people of Michigan at the next general election has been taken from latitude and brought before your honorable body. We, the officers of the woman's christian temperance union, representing more than 5,000 of the women of Michigan, hereby petition for the passage of the bill.

1. Because we believe that prohibition rests in the will of the state in the organic law of the state is the only adequate remedy for an evil so great.

2. The people have the right to defend themselves an the baleful box from a system which wounds mortally, destroys physically, burdens financially, and harms the righteous powers of the government under which they live.

Your petitioners also pray that a joint resolution be framed requesting the Michigan representation in congress of the United States to vote and use their influence for the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors, whenever this question comes into the realm of the national legislature.

For the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

MARY T. LATHRAP, Pres.
EMMA A. WHEELER, Cor. Sec'y.
JULIA A. HOWARD,
Supt. Legislation and Petitions.

This memorial was handsomely received spread upon the journal, on motion of Senator Belknap.

For myself personally I desire to make a denial as unqualified as that of the organization. No member of the legislature can truthfully say that I sought him for the purpose of using influence in any way or uttered a word against the passage of the bill. I was absent from the state until after the bill had passed the house and know very little of the measure to that point. When it was pending in the senate it was well known that if that body came to the same action as the house it would be at a date only one month before the spring election of 1885, and that no proper time was to be given for a campaign before the great question came to the polls.

Some of the officers of the W. C. T. U. proposed that protest be made against the date for the vote, but such protest was never made, because it was feared that it might be used as an excuse for failing to keep at the capitol the pledge made at the republican convention. The memorial above quoted was the only action and spoke the honest sentiment of officers and members of the union.

Upon the matter of imperiling the cause of prohibition by forcing it upon the unprepared people, I did express my opinion on two or three occasions. I believe the date of submission was in favor of the liquor traffic, instead of the people and that it was the duty of our legislators to guard the people, instead of the saloon. But to say that such expression of opinion under the circumstances made, was intended to influence any vote on submission or that it produced that effect has all the intent and color of falsehood. Some of the gentlemen using it know this to be a fact and are, therefore, culable; others pass it along as part of the campaign stock and are less guilty.

If the aforesaid statements are true it does not help the republican party. The prohibitionists are seeking to bring the question to the people for settlement. If the legislature forced the vote of doing the people's will, had determined to use such methods as to endanger the main question, the prohibition party and the W. C. T. U. could consistently have made protest; but they did not make it.

The prohibition party convention at Lansing that spring tabled a resolution which related to the date fixed for the vote, and unqualifiedly asked for submission when they knew the burden and expense of the battle campaign would be upon them.

If it were true that a woman's "lobbying" so influenced the action of a great party that they now feel called upon to apologize to the people for such action they might have redeemed themselves at Grand Rapids, come out squarely for submission and thus prove to the people without any such weak apology for a great cowardice.

MARY T. LATHRAP,
President of Michigan W. C. T. U.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Cold Glittering Facts."

The Sentinel, in responding to a toast, "The press," given at the reception of Dr. Reynolds, at the Bridge Street house, on Tuesday evening of last week, says, "It is a cold glittering fact that the leader of the W. C. T. U. in Michigan, lobbied against the submission of the prohibitory amendment in the last legislature," which she says is an absolute falsehood.

Now for some cold glittering facts that will refute the cold glittering falsehood made by the Sentinel in response to the above toast. It is a cold glittering fact that Dan Jerome received some 291 republican votes, while Mr. Sheldon received but 189 prohibition votes. It is a cold glittering fact that Mr. Berdan and Mr. Jerome each received four votes on prohibition tickets, in Charlevoix. It is a cold glittering fact that four years ago this winter, the republican majority in the legislature was largely over two thirds, and that they refused after being polled from all parts of the state to submit the amendment of the constitution to a vote of the people. It is a cold glittering fact, that there are two to one more states enjoying enforced prohibitory laws under democratic rule than under republican rule. It is a cold glittering fact, that the republican party has repealed all the prohibitory laws ever had in this state. It is a cold glittering fact, that the republican party gain this year, over the vote of two years ago, came from the democrat and greenback parties, instead of the republican party. So much for the and given to the democrats.

It is a cold glittering fact, that the prohibition party has come to stay, and don't you forget it.

PROHIBITION VOTER.

Kind Words.

"Excuse me, will reply to-morrow when I go to press," were the words of Mr. Farmelee at the reception of Dr. Reynolds, in Charlevoix. Mr. Farmelee was not only unkind and unjournalistic in his reply but insulted every lady and gentleman present when he infers that the W. C. T. U. will aid in running a third party on Icon and as a democratic aid society for be it remembered, the W. C. T. U. are Prohibitionists. Mr. Farmelee better sentiments were expected of you, as it is universally conceded that you are the brains of the Sentinel. Should I be laboring under misapprehension; would say in your behalf; it would be preposterous for man to undertake what your Creator has failed in; but if you will maintain your dignity as a journalist, and train with the prohibition element of Charlevoix, there's a faint hope of your gaining the respect and esteem of those whom you so grossly insulted. Let me ask who has the power to grant a license for a third saloon?

The above Eye-Glass invented by the Johnsons, of Detroit, Wayne County, Mich., combines the best qualities of all other Eye-Glasses.

1st. The lenses can be placed for smooth work that the equalizers will not permit them, as they not always easy to do with other eye-glasses.

2d. The lenses are so set as to equalize their load and relieve the nose, which prevents pinching and sliding.

3d. The pressure is on the nasal part of the nose above the bones, which prevents irritation.

4th. The lens focus occurs in perfect adjustment to the nose whether large or small.

5th. The lenses are set at right angles to line of vision.

6th. They can be worn safely without cord or chain wherever there is danger of loss.

7th. We warrant them to be the easiest eyes to be worn.

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

Her Criticisms Upon the Theatrical Reproductions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Not long ago I visited Hartford and was received at a pretty brick house, all gables and angles, painted a Quaker gray, white green clinging vines, over porch and bay windows, added to this picturesque home. A garden surrounds the house, embracing velvety lawns and bright flower-beds. Just around the corner lives Mr. Samuel Clemens, or Mark Twain, while the adjoining estate is that of Charles Dudley Warner.

This was before Mrs. Stowe's recent bereavement in the loss of her husband. We sat in her cozy, old-fashioned parlor, where the books and pictures are all souvenirs of sweet memories. The Professor was up-stairs asleep, so she knew he did not read her. Near her in the pretty parlor sat her two daughters, Miss Eliza and Miss Harriet, clever, interesting ladies. Conversation fell upon "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and, as I was desirous of hearing her speak of it, I at last said: "Everybody has read the book. I do not think I ever met a person who could read at all who was not familiar with it."

"Perhaps you think so," said Mrs. Stowe, "but I know of some who have never read it."

"Who?" I asked, surprised at her quaint, positive way of speaking.

"Who? Why, the actors who play in the dramatized version. I am sure they never can, or they would have gained some knowledge of the book and characters. Look," she continued, "at the way they depict Simon Legree, for instance."

"Let me see," I said, "they make him coarse and brutal, with a red flannel shirt, a wide leather belt, into which is stuck a knife or pistol, a black beard, and black hair."

"Yes," said Mrs. Stowe, "that is exactly how they do make him look."

I took up a volume of "Uncle Tom's" and, turning to the description of Simon Legree, read the following: "He was short, broad, and muscular, a round bullet head, covered with stiff, wiry, sunburned hair; he had light gray eyes, with sharp, sand-colored eyebrows, like his hair; his face and hands were freckled. He wore brown pantaloons of thin, light-colored material, the worse for wear and dust, and a checked shirt, wide open at the neck." Further on in the book it speaks of his sandy hair and a long linen coat and wide Panama hat.

"Yes," said Mrs. Stowe, "I dressed him like a Southerner and made him blonde. I had a certain similar man in my mind as I wrote of him, but the actors all dress him like a Western border man, with sombrero, red shirt, and high boots, and make him of dark complexion."

So we went through several of the characters. "St. Clair," she said, "I drew as the happy, light-hearted, cultured Southern gentleman, with all the elegant ease and indolence of his class, clothed in the extreme of fashion, but in Southern fashion, so different from our Northern style of dress, particularly so at the period the book represents."

"Did you have some one in your mind when you wrote of St. Clair?" said I.

"Yes," she answered. "I know just such an elegant, easy-going man. I wish I could see him upon the stage, just as I remember him, but St. Clair now is dressed like every man you meet."

Then she went on at length to discuss the inaccuracies of the productions—"Why, they have Topsy and Tom Lover hobnobbing with Legree, they are mine apart in the book. They seldom moves introduce, I am told, the incident I like best in the book."

"What is that?" I asked.

"Eva's fall overboard from the Mississippi steamboat and her rescue by Uncle Tom."

"And did you never see it well played, Mrs. Stowe?" I asked.

"Yes; in fact I never saw the play through but once. That was years ago. I was induced, not long ago, to attend a performance of the book, but after remaining a short time and seeing the many inaccuracies, I did not care to remain through the evening."

Then she told me of a visit she and her husband made to Boston, where they saw the play of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as it was originally produced at the Boston Museum. As I write I have before me the old playbill, which certainly is full of interest. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was first produced on any stage Monday evening, Nov. 15, 1852. It was dramatized by Mr. H. J. Conway, a gentleman of Boston. It ran for 100 performances—in those days a remarkably long time. It was received with the greatest enthusiasm, and from time to time in the history of the Boston Museum it has reappeared, always with success. The version given at the museum is entirely different from others, and is the only one indorsed by Mrs. Stowe.

There was a panorama of the Mississippi River. Which the steamboat had a rocking motion, steam came out of the huge smokestack, and everything was as realistic as possible.

It is not likely that Mrs. Stowe will ever attend the theatre again. The recent death of her husband, to whom she was greatly attached, is a great sorrow. She is now 75 years of age, but when in the mood talks as brightly as in her youth. She is short and slender, and quite as good a walker and as active as many a young girl.

She said in further referring to her witnessing the play of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that they were both rare visitors to the theatre and enjoyed the acting and scenery to the fullest extent, the Professor fairly clapping his hands with joy as he saw anything particularly striking to his wife, "just as if made them." Then they enjoyed the comment of the audience between the acts.

"One could not help but feel pleased," said Mrs. Stowe. "I hope I was not too proud. Those were very happy days, full of life, and hope, and pleasure, as well as work."—Boston Globe.

To Marry a King.

Down in Hanover county, Virginia, not many miles from this city, an African girl who is destined to marry a king. At the present time she is a member of the family of the Rev. Curtis Grubb, an Episcopal clergyman, who many years ago went out from Louisa county, Virginia, as a missionary to Western Africa. While there he and his wife became much attached to a little girl, a princess of the native among whom they were prosecuting their missionary work, and when it came time for them to return to their home in America they asked permission that the child should accompany them. She was then not more than 8 or 9 years of age. The father, who was first requested to allow his daughter to come to America, gave his consent, it may be not thinking that the missionary and his wife were serious in their intention of taking the child home with them, but when it came time for the departure he did not want her to go. He was told that he had promised that she might be taken by the missionary. It is a cardinal principle among the tribe that a promise once made cannot be broken, if it is insisted upon, so the father reluctantly gave his consent that the child might go. The missionary named it Nettie. After his own wife, and treated it more as a plaything and curiosity than as a servant. Though having children of their own, the little African girl was treated as though of the same kith and kin, and looked up to the missionary and his wife as though they were her own parents. She made progress in education, and learned the ways of Americans with amazing rapidity. Greater politeness could not be expected of a Parisian born she always displays. Never can she be induced to pass in front of any one, and whenever she hands anything to a person it is her invariable custom to fall upon her knees in an exaggerated courtesy. She is now 14 years old, she has arrived at the age when she would be eligible to marriage if still among her own people. Ever since she came to America a correspondence has been kept up between Mr. Grubb and his successors in Africa, and thus her friends have heard from her and she from them. In a letter recently received Mr. Grubb was request-ed to give his consent that little Nettie might return to her native land that the king of her country might marry her. This request will probably be complied with if the child herself can be induced to give up her American friends, to whom she is very much attached. She is well educated for one of her years, and fully understands the manners and customs of civilized life, and should she become the wife of the king there is no telling but she would have a powerful influence in uplifting her people from their present degradation.—Washington Letter.

WHY WE DIDN'T.

A Story of Blockade-Running Told by a Second Mate.

In the spring of 1863, just after my return from a voyage to China and back in a British bark, I was loafing around Liverpool to wait for a berth, when one William Savage, an old sailor mate of mine, ran across me one evening and offered to ship me in a steamer which had run the blockade into Confederate three times and was about to attempt a fourth trip. She was a fast-sized side-wheeler called the Isle of Wight, and had nearly finished her loading. She carried a crew of about twenty men, and Savage was kind enough to say that I should be second mate, and that the pay would be the highest I ever received.

In a day or two I found the steamer was loading with two or three field batteries, two large guns for armiers, and an immense amount of other war material. When everything was aboard I heard it said that steamer and cargo was worth a full million dollars, and we were to touch at Nassau and take on 3,000 muskets, a lot of hospital stores, and some odds and ends badly wanted by the Confederacy. Our crew was a queer set, with nothing of the sailor about them, while the captain was a typical John Bull named Graham.

I heard it said that our venture was known to the American Minister, and that he promptly notified his government, but no cruiser would have any business with us until we left Nassau. We made that port in due season, everything working smoothly, and although we took in our additional cargo inside of twenty-four hours the steamer delayed her sailing to the fifth day, on account of a Yankee man-of-war hovering on the coast in hopes to nab us. Meanwhile the crew had a jolly time among the taverns, and Savage managed here our full part. It was one evening when we were both the worse for liquor that he took me aside and began:

"William, I believe you to be a reliable man. You are poor, and I can put you in the way of handling a snug $25,000."

His language sobered me up and sobered me. He went around the brush for awhile, and then came to the point, which he stated as follows:

"Here's a steamer and cargo worth at least $1,000,000. What's to prevent us from seizing her, making a Yankee port, and coasting in for the prize-money?"

"Why, the captain and crew will prevent," I replied.

"The captain may try to, but the crew are all right. I've sounded them to a man, and they'll stick by me."

"Wouldn't it be mutiny and piracy?"

"Exactly. If any of us are fools enough to return to England we must stand our chances. The Yankees will be only too glad to welcome us."

To my discredit, perhaps, I needed but little urging to join the conspiracy, and when we finally put to sea everything was ripe for the seizure. The pilot, who was a Southerner, was the only man beside the captain not in the plot. Savage had sounded him a bit, but found him loyal to the core, and gave him up. It was arranged that the seizure should take place at midnight. At that hour the pilot was asleep in his berth, the captain dozing with his anxious on, and the steamer was running through a calm sea, with the stars shining overhead. As the moment arrived Savage and I went down to secure the captain while two others went to take care of the pilot. The latter was the one who got the start of us. The men went down to find him just turning out, and thought they threw themselves upon him he knocked them right and left and got upstairs to the pilot-house. There he was attacked by the two men at the wheel, but the row ended in his shooting one stone dead and bowling the other out with a broken head. The racket raised by the pilot when first assulted alarmed the captain, and he greeted us with a shower of bullets and forced us out of the cabin. Savage being slow in both the arm and leg.

Then began a high old time. Every man of us had a revolver, and we divided off so as to keep the captain below and the pilot in his house. The engineers and firemen quit their posts so as to make a hand in, and in about an hour the steamer lay idle on the sea, having no longer any steam. We were now in for it and bound to have the craft. We could keep the captain below, but we must down the pilot. I should say that 100 bullets were fired into the pilot-house between midnight and daylight, but none of them wounded him. In retaliation he killed one man and wounded two. When daylight came we were scattered about wherever we could find cover, and we opened on him again. It became evident, however, after we had wasted a good deal of lead that the only way to get him out was to make a rush. Officer wasted to head one, as two or three men were certain to be killed. We had him penned up, but he had us rolling on the sea as helpless as a log.

It was about 9 o'clock, and we had gone aft one by one for a bite to eat, when a Yankee blockader hove in sight. Indeed, when we first saw her she was only ten miles off. Less than an hour later she was alongside and we were all prisoners. We told our story, claiming, I believe, to have been thrilled to capture the craft by patriotic motives, but all the prize-money which we got out of it was three months in jail apiece. Either the story didn't wash or the Yankee commander didn't want to whack up on his rich haul.—Detroit Free Press.

Nellson and a St. Louis Maiden.

Willie Winter, the dramatic critic, is about to issue a life of Adelaide Nellson. He would have done well had he sought in St. Louis for some interesting incidents of her social life, for not only was the beautiful and talented actress much admired and courted as a queen of the stage, but as a social star when she visited this city. She had many warm friends and intimate associates among the best-known and highest-bred women in St. Louis. In one old French family there are three sisters who always make a visit on the anniversary of her death to the mulberry tree planted in her memory near the monument to Shakspeare at Tower Grove park, and on one of its boughs they hang a garland of flowers, whose groundwork of immortelles remains until another anniversary brings fresh flowers as an offering. Her pictures are always for sale in the book and art stores, and in many private homes they are framed and hung in conspicuous places. The writer once accompanied Nellie Hazeltine in a visit to Adelaide Nellson, who was found surrounded by a bevy of callers. She received the St. Louis beauty, who was already personally known to her, most warmly, and, holding out her hand, said, in a low tone: "Stay until these people are gone, please," and the belle staid. Hardly had Nellson bowed the last caller out of the reception-room before she bounded to the sofa, where our home beauty was seated, and, seizing both hands, she said: "I want to look deep into your eyes, for men tell me here that mine are like yours, and you know men read as through our eyes." And those two sat half laughing and gazed for a minute into each other's eyes, such glorious eyes as both proved, with looks that had all the earnest innocence of two children, who seek for 'wells' in each other's eyes. 'I only see that yours are the most beautiful orbs I ever looked into,' said Nellie at the close of a minute. 'And I understand why men think mine beautiful if they look like yours,' answered Nellson, and they relaxed their 'regards,' as the French would say, but seemed to have found each in the other a source of great interest.—St. Louis Republican.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Peter), is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perception being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal, his practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every other remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world was a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease and its won

EASTERN.

A New York paper prints a sensational story to the effect that the disappearance of Mrs. Victoria Morsini-Schilling has been the result of foul play.

A fire on Staten Island, caused by a kerosene lamp, destroyed a dyeing establishment at West New Brighton, valued at $100,000.

Snow fell at Lockport, New York, Boston, and as far west as Cleveland last week, to the depth of a foot, impeding railway travel.

In a loft at Kingston, N. Y., there was found the original laws written by Benedict Arnold to the American people to vindicate himself for his attempted betrayal of the country.

For the first time in years, no strikes are reported from the Pittsburg district, and all industries are being operated to the fullest extent.

In a boarding-house at Newark, N. J., the sight of a single roast chicken for seven hungry men caused a fight with knives, in which two men were stabbed, the table was wrecked, and the supper strewn over the floor.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has decided that the license tax could not be collected from corporations. The loss to the State by this ruling in Allegheny County alone will reach $225,000.

WESTERN.

A Chicago dispatch says: Conferences were held on Saturday between the packers and the agents of the strikers, brought about by Congressman Lawler, but nothing was accomplished during the day looking to ending the Stock Yards trouble. In the evening, however, at a strikers' meeting on Halsted street, T. P. Barry appeared and read a dispatch from Grand Master Workman Powderly declaring the strike at an end, and the demand of the strikers as unreasonable. The dispatch was a surprise, and created considerable ill-feeling. Powderly's telegram ordering the men back to work was received Wednesday, but its announcement was for some unknown reason held back. As these are now nearly 10,000 at work in the packing-houses it is impossible that all the old hands can find employment. Local Assembly No. 8037, Knights of Labor, has placed a boycott on Armour's products.

An entertainment at San Francisco netted $5,000 for the benefit of the Charleston sufferers.

Under a foreclosure the Indianapolis, Peru and Chicago division of the old Wabash system was sold to the bondholders for $1,800,000.

The new Union Depot at Toledo, located over a mile from the business quarter of the city, was on Sunday thrown open to the public. Ten thousand people gathered to witness the arrival of the first train.

The County Court House at Lacqui-Parle, Minn., a frame structure two stories high, was placed on four large trucks by a team from Madison, fourteen miles distant, and moved to that place, which had been selected as the new county seat. The affair has caused much excitement.

D. S. Fotheringham, the Adams Express messenger robbed of $20,000 in two robberies, was found on Saturday morning last, arraigned in the Criminal Court at St. Louis charged with grand larceny and accepting stolen property. He pleaded not guilty, and was committed to jail.

Heavy snowstorms occurred in Iowa, Southern Dakota, and Wisconsin last week, the snow being eight inches on the level throughout Western Iowa. A Chicago, Burlington and Quincy passenger train dashed into a freight train in the snow at Hinton Station, Iowa. Several persons were injured, and the entire freight train was destroyed by fire. A Denver (Col.) dispatch reports that a stage-coach containing nine passengers was caught in a snowslide on the top of the mountains, fifteen miles east of Aspen. The entire outfit was carried over a precipice two hundred feet high. A relief party succeeded in digging the passengers and driver out of the avalanche. Four were unhurt; but Robert Dwyer, Chris Cook, Duncan G. Ralphson, I. A. Bardwell, and Lillie McPherson are expected to die.

At Muncie, Ind., Mrs. Lizzie Barbford play-ully dared George Kennedy, aged 17, who was "fooling" with a revolver, to shoot her. The youth aimed and fired at the woman, the bullet entering her temple, killing her instantly.

The Minneola and Northwestern Road will open its line between Chicago and St. Paul next week. It will have a limited train, making 1 or run in thirteen hours.

The firm of Cohen, Sampliz & Co., of Cleveland, manufacturers of gents' furnishing goods for the past quarter century, has failed, with liabilities of $230,000.

Near Cardonia, Ind., James Blackwood, his wife, and two grown sons, got drunk together. The following morning Blackwood was found near his home, and his blood-stained garments exciting suspicion search was made for his wife. Her remains were found on the road, half a mile away, and the indications were that she had been kicked to death. The sons are missing, but Blackwood is in the Brazil jail.

A furious snow-storm, accompanied by a high wind, swept over the Northwest on the far-west plains on the 16th, 17th and 18th of November, seriously interfering with railway traffic. The storm seems to have been severest in Southern Dakota, where more than a foot of snow fell. In Iowa and Minnesota all trains were from three to ten hours behind time, and some were even abandoned altogether. The blizzard extended southward into Texas, where the coldest November weather for twenty-five years was reported.

Eight lives were lost by the foundering of the barges Dixon and Emerald in Lake Michigan, off Kewaunee, Wis. A Green Bay dispatch furnishes the following particulars of the disaster: "The steam-barge Jenkins Ford, with four sail-barges, the Dixon and Emerald, coal laden, for Manitowoc, and Reese and Lillie Mey, coal laden, for Milwaukee, were driven into Kewaunee, where the Dixon struck about three o'clock and found several feet from water. Three of the seven men in her crew went down with her. Shortly afterward the next barge, the Emerald, was in the breakers and went on the beach about noon. Her crew of five men took to the yawl-boat, but only the mate reached shore alive, and it is thought he can not recover from his injuries. The life-saving crew at Two Rivers were sent for, but had all they could attend to at home. Of the eight men lost three are said to hail from Green Bay, among them a sergeant, Capt. Wakefield, of the Dixon, and Capt. Robinson, of the Dixon, got ashore alive."

A Chicago telegram says the Pinkerton police agency in that city is investigating a statement that a lad was employed by two men on a street corner to deliver at the residence of P. D. Armour, the millionaire meat packer, a big pound package of wheat flour containing a liberal mixture of strychnine and hydrate.

At the meeting of the Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association in Chicago, resolutions were adopted urging that the General Government take the most vigorous steps to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia.

SOUTHERN.

In a fight at twelve rounds at Muldraugh Station, Ky., in the presence of a train-load of sporting characters, Tommy Warren defeated Patsy O'Leary. On a frosty track at Baltimore Jack Kirain knocked Frank Roarid into a cotner, and a Deputy Sheriff stopped the fight.

Jay Gould's recent purchase of depot grounds at Memphis, together with the resolution to extend the Memphis and Charleston Road to Chattanooga, points to an alliance between the Gould and East Tennessee systems.

Andrew J. Mulligan, alias James Page, who murdered James N. Hamilton, his employer, in Macon County, Ark., was taken from the jail at Harrison by thirty-three armed and masked men, dragged with a rope around his neck, hoisted upon a spare horse for four miles, then strung up to a tree and riddled with bullets.

Atlanta is flooded with prohibition bibles, which could be carried up a church aisle without attracting notice. A spring at one end reveals a well-filled bottle.

The Houston and Texas Central bondholders are at work upon a plan of reorganization of the road.

A white citizen of Chatham, N. C., named Moore, has been sent to the chain-gang for a term of two years for selling a pistol to one Dr. Emanuel Dreifus, convicted at New Orleans of subornation of perjury, a witness in the celebrated Freedman case, was sentenced to seven and a half years in the penitentiary.

The First National Bank of Pine Bluff, Ark., has been wrecked by the cotton, land, and railway speculations of its chief stockholder, C. M. Nock.

The business portion of Durham, N. C., was partly destroyed by fire. The loss is $500,000, with insurance of $120,000.

Congressman George D. Wise was arrested at Richmond, Va., on a charge of being about to commit a breach of the peace. Mr. Wise had published a card denouncing ex-Mayor William Lamb, of Norfolk, and stating that Lamb was a man whom, for special reasons, he could not meet on the field of honor.

WASHINGTON.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is out. The total receipts from all sources of internal revenue for the year ended June 30, 1886, were $116,960,909, as compared with $111,431,151 in 1885. The principal increase was in cigars, cigarettes, and spirits distilled from grain. The cost of collection during the year was $4,799,685.

The War Department has approved of the allotment by the Mississippi River Commission of $100,000 for the Yazoo Delta district, which will probably complete a continuous line of levee from Memphis to Vicksburg, 350 miles.

General Sheridan, in his annual report to the Secretary of War, remarks that unless the states of the Oklahoma lands be fixed by legislation their adjacent will prove a continued temptation to adventurers.

The Supreme Court has entered judgment against the Union Pacific Railroad of the Choctaw Nation for nearly $6,000,000, including accrued interest.

It is understood that the naval estimates are $10,000,000 less in amount than last year.

The report of the inspector of building-stones shows rapidity with which Washington is growing. In the last fiscal year 2,198 dwellings were erected, against 1,398 in 1885, and 1,066 in 1884. The boy strike last spring in the building trades appears to have made very little impression on the building.

POLITICAL.

Gen. Chalmers, of the Second Mississippi Congressional District, is preparing to contest the seat of L. Q. Lamar.

Ex-Governor Foster, of Louisiana, has written a letter in which he says that he had only $1,500 in excess in Canadian money, and a note attached them and resened the little which had been seized. A number of men were severely wounded.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Three masked men broke into the house of Matthew C. McKeever, living near Pittsburg, Pa., and, after an hour's fight, in which Mr. McKeever's sisters, Margaret and Jane, were terribly injured, succeeded in stealing a bonded coupon for nearly $10,000, with which they escaped.

The east-bound limited express on the Pennsylvania, Cincinnati and Baltimore road was wrecked by a landslide at Jones' Ferry, at the outskirts of Pittsburg. Three sleeping-cars were demolished, and a number of persons injured, two fatally.

New York, Pennsylvania, and other Eastern States were swept by a wind-storm of unusual violence and destructiveness on the 18th inst. In the vicinity of Chambersburg and Lock Haven, Pa., the gale leveled houses and barns, tore up trees by the roots, and imperiled the lives of many persons. The iron smoke-stacks of a paper-mill at Lock Haven were blown down, demolishing another building and burying four men in the ruins. At Williamsport, Pa., roofs were blown off and trees snapped in halves. The Catholic Church at Ringtown, Pa., was wrecked, and the steeple of the Methodist Church at Parsons, Pa., was demolished. A carpenter at the latter place was killed by a flying board. The chemical works of John T. Thompson, at Troy, N. Y., were wrecked, and the loss will reach $50,000. Two men were burned by vitriol, and a canalboat loaded with iron was sunk by the wind and drowned. The storm in Connecticut destroyed a number of large tobacco sheds which contained this year's crop, and the losses will be heavy. Many buildings were unroofed at New Haven, and chimneys, trees, and fences were blown down, creating a loss of several thousand dollars. It is reported that twelve barges sank off Milford, Conn., and that each barge carried at least two persons.

The authorities at Atlanta have licensed thirty-six saloon-rooms, as the liquor law permits the sale of domestic wine.

The Union Pacific has purchased the lines of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company.

Joseph Hoffman, a tailor in St. Louis, in imitating a sword-swallower, let a cameo-ring slip down his throat. His stomach was opened and the knife removed.

A number of business buildings at Joliet, Ill., were destroyed by fire on the 18th. The aggregate loss will reach $100,000.

John Arensdorf, Albert Bismark, Henry Sherman, Paul Leader, F. Mancorah, Fritz Schroeder, Frank Schroeder, Henry Peters, and I. Fath have been indicted for conspiracy in the Hallock murder case at Sioux City, Iowa.

The dwelling of James Johnson, a farmer living near Louisville, Ind., was burned. Johnson's two daughters, aged eighteen and twenty, perished in the flames. A hired man was fatally burned, but the rest of the family escaped in their night-clothes.

While a number of bailiffs, protected by a strong police force, were trying to carry out an eviction process in County Cork, they had a rough time with them and rescued the little which had been seized. A number of men were severely wounded.

Increase of Crime Among Children.

French statistics just published contain alarming information concerning the increase of crime among children of both sexes. The number of offenders under sixteen years of age has augmented in five years from 2,235 to 3,767 for boys, and from 418 to 918 for girls. From sixteen to twenty-one years of age the number of criminals has increased from 12,401 to 16,468 for boys, and from 1,046 to 2,809 for girls. The ratio of crime among offenders under age has therefore considerably more than doubled during the last five years. The statistics register for the first time numerous cases of suicide committed by children.

LABOR AND LABORERS.

An Encouraging Outlook in the Industrial World—The Utility of Water Power.

A Healthy Stimulus in Manufacturing and Building Enterprise—Industrial Notes.

The great activity in business circles during the past sixty days has stimulated manufacturing and building enterprise in nearly every State in the Union. The greatest activity is in the New England and Middle States. Large mills are to be built at Fall River, one with 20,000 spindles. One will cost $500,000, and run 40,000 spindles. Textile mills are to be erected at Lunenburg, Mass., at Danby, Vt., at Otsquville, R. I., at West Paterson, N. J., and at several places in the South. New machinery is going into every hall of the manufacturing establishments of these States. In fact, such active prosperity has not been experienced in years before known. In consequence there is an increased demand for improved engines, light appliances, and machinery, besides electric lighting and the full shift in the future, be considered a lady. The choice of innings will depend on the toss of the two captains. A batter is out on the fourth strike under the new rule whether the ball is dropped or passed by the catcher. The question of having water-power, even a quantity—500 to 600 horse-power—cannot be overestimated in a manufacturer's business, and it was dropped. A misdirection of the umpire's ruling, making the batter out, was adopted. The pitcher's box was shortened to 45 feet, and the pitcher will hereafter be required to keep his forward foot firmly entwined at little cost and rather important economic advantages on these points are which Mr. McKeever's sisters, Margaret and Jane, were terribly injured, succeeded in stealing a bonded coupon for nearly $10,000, with which they escaped.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

The Ex-President Passes Away at His Residence in New York City.

A Stroke of Cerebral Apoplexy the Immediate Cause of Death.

Chester Alan Arthur, ex-President of the United States, died suddenly at his residence, 123 Lexington avenue, at 1 a.m., Thursday, Nov. 18. The immediate cause of his death was a stroke of cerebral apoplexy which came to his sleep between Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, the result of the bursting of a blood vessel. His death was painless. It was like the slow going out of a burned-down candle, and for hours before the end came the dying man was unconscious. His son and his sister, Mrs. Mason, and Sherman W. Rockwell, the former law partner and intimate friend, were at his bedside when the end came.

Mr. Arthur had been in ill health for a long time, and his friends had noted a very much pale, and attributed the immediately prior to the fatal attack he was apparently brighter and more cheerful than usual. His death was not unexpected by the more intimate friends. For two years he had been a victim to Bright's disease of the kidneys, which had become extended and enlarged heart. It was this latter disease that finally ended his life. The complications had prepared the way for the rupture of the blood vessel in the brain which caused his death.

The beginning of Gen. Arthur's illness dates back to the latter part of his administration at Washington. On leaving the national capital he was thought to be in good health, and his physicians, Drs. Fordyce Barker and Frank Hamilton, made a very effort within the range of their skill to make the remained did him no apparent good, and he was obliged to give up his work for a few days, to be with his family in the warm summer weather, however, the patient rallied, and he was able to be out of doors. He was able to be out of doors, and he was able to be out of doors, and he was able to be out of doors, and he

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The death of Mr. Arthur leaves Rutherford B. Hayes the sole living ex president.

The Michigan Christian Advocate is out in a new dress, with a new head, and is printed on a perfecting press. It now has over 10,000 subscribers.

The Grand Rapids Democrat is out in an entirely new dress of type, —body and display.—of more modern cut than the previous one. With its new perfecting press, new type, and other improvements, the Democrat is one of the liveliest papers in Michigan.

The importance of one vote has again been demonstrated. It elected a democrat member of the legislature in Passaic county, New Jersey. This one democrat makes the legislature of that state democratic. That democratic legislature will elect a democratic United States senator. That democratic senator will so balance the senate that Riddleberger may hold the balance of power.

The laborer should have the same market to buy in that he is compelled to sell his labor in. He is forced to buy protected clothing, but sells his unprotected labor in competition with the pauper labor of the whole world. Until this order of things is radically changed and the workingman is placed on an absolute equality with his tariff protected employer, the cause of revenue reform will not perish in this country.—Lansing Journal.

It is no longer a state secret that ex Mayor Wm. Van Buren will be the deputy auditor general under the administration of "Tip" Aplin, who will succeed Major Stevens on Jan. 1. "Van" is well qualified to fill a position of that responsible character, and his many friends here and elsewhere will rejoice to see his claims receive such substantial recognition at the hands of his party.—Lansing Journal.

The designs for the new postal card approach Jeffersons simplicity without any dombt. The vignet of Jefferson, the father of democracy, is a side view in a circle, with elaboration, in the middle and top of the card. The legend "United States postal card" is on it, "one cent" under it, and beneath all, "Nothing but the address on this side." The objection to the present design is that it is too large for the size of the card, and does not give writers sufficient space to put the address on properly. It will probably be the middle of December before the new design will be ready.—Ex.

"Tip" Aplin ran four thousand ahead of his ticket because he was a knight of labor on the republican ticket. William G. Beard one of the most prominent knights in the state ran about even with the fusion state ticket. Democratic knights slipped their tickets for a republican carpet knight, while republican knights did not remember their democratic fellow. Democratic knights sacrificed that gallant soldier, Colonel Farrar for a man who has been glued to office for twenty years, and received no return therefor. How long will democratic knights be decoyed in this way? It is a republican game that they should decline play.—Free Press.

Railroad Rumors.

Surveyors are on the route between Traverse City and Baldwin for the Chicago & West Michigan and they go through to Charlevoix. Hurray! —Progress.

Four different parties of surveyors are at work on the projected Duluth, Sault Ste. Marie & Atlantic railroad. Chief Engineer Latchs has advertised for 600,000 cross ties, to be delivered on the line during the winter in lots of not less than 75,000 each.

The G. R. & I. may possibly take hold of the John Barrett logging road which is to be built from Kalkaska to Williamsburg, a distance of fifteen miles, and extend it this place. We believe that the G. R. & I. of forced to put down the rails if Torrent would furnish the road bed.—Elk Rapids Progress.

J. B. Mulliken, the general manager of the D., L. & N. and C. & W. M. railroads, was in the city yesterday, and was confined to his room at the Morton by an attack of neuralgia in the head. He was not accessible to reporters but was able during the day to transact considerable business. Some of the officers of the G. R. & I. called upon him and talked over matters at Muskegon. Mr. Mulliken has just returned from Boston where the directors and heavy stock holders of his road reside, and a reporter was informed by a person who is cognizant of the facts that he made arrangements while down there for large extensions of the C. & W. M. next season. Surveyors and inspectors have been fitted out and are now on the road running a line from Baldwin north to Traverse City. They will also make surveys to Charlevoix and a spur to Frankfort. This gentleman said: "The road will certainly be extended next season as far as Traverse City and may go on to Charlevoix, although that is not so certain. Mr. Mulliken made the arrangements when in Boston recently, and the men are now fitted out to run the lines."—Grand Rapids Democrat.

"It is authoritatively stated in railroad circles here that the Chicago & West Michigan and Detroit, Lansing & Northern roads will soon enter into an agreement to give Michigan a large and powerful railroad system largely benefiting Grand Rapids. The scheme is to bring about a more perfect connection between the Michigan roads under the control of the Boston syndicate by the construction of a road from here to Grand Ledge and an extension of the Newaygo branch from Baldwin to Traverse City and Elk Rapids, thus uniting the system in such a manner that all western Michigan traffic will find direct eastern outlet through here via Lansing and Detroit. This will give the syndicate control of nearly 900 miles of railroad in the lower peninsula, one line extending across from north to south, and two lines east and west. This gives an air line between Grand Rapids and Detroit. Surveyors are now at work upon this portion of the project. J. B. Mulliken, of Detroit, and Nathan Thayer, Alpheus Hardy, Charles Merriam, of Boston, have just returned from a tour over the road. Jerry Boynton, of this city, who has been working up local aid here and along the line to Lansing, says to-night that all the aid needed is pledged, and he will at once commence to secure the right of way."—Free Press.

The Reporters Offended.

There are some ostentatious givings out that President Cleveland does not treat reporters and newspaper men with the consideration they deserve. His latest offense is not providing them with a free lunch on his journey to Richmond. Judging from the tone of some republican and disaffected democratic papers, this overlooking of the reporters has pretty much finished the Cleveland boom for 1888.

Now, although it is perhaps as bad as any one can do to give offense to reporters and to offend these "abstracts and brief chronicles of the present time" as it was to slight the players in Hamlet's day, and much better to have their good will, yet there are from ten to twelve million orders in the United States, and it is just possible that a majority of these may think a man fitted for the presidency even though he did neglect to provide the Washington newspaper reporters with a free lunch. Of course this is not probable, for to injure the feelings of a Washington correspondent comes nigh to blasphemy, if not to committing the unpardonable sin itself. Yet people are eccentric in these affairs. They may get the notion that the Washington correspondents have determined to revenge themselves for that free lunch which failed to materialize, by a systematic detraction of Cleveland and by disgraceful and impertinent gossip about him and his family. Should the fickle and unreasoning majority conceive this idea they might decide to re-elect Cleveland in spite of any hostile remarks. So that it is not best to calculate too strongly on the amount of unpopularity his failure to provide the newspaper men with lunch shall provoke in the hardshelled yeomanry and horny handed workingmen of the land.—Detroit Journal.

A man six feet nigh and forty years old is living in an open field on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad three miles east of Columbia. He refuses shelter, which has been repeatedly offered him, but accepts food. He has long black hair, extending below the shoulders, high cheek bones, and resembles an Indian. He takes to the woods at the approach of strangers. During the recent severe weather he refused to leave his present quarters, and insisted on sleeping in the field. He has been living thus for about two months.

No woman can be contented and happy if her skin is covered with pimples and blotches. These disfiguring eruptions are easily removed by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine is perfectly safe to take, and is a thoroughly reliable blood purifier.

Vitality and color are restored to weak and pale blood, by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. The unrivaled cleansing and healing qualities, it prevents the accumulation of dandruff and cures all scalp diseases.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for dyspepsia and biliousness, and I can testify to its efficacy. I have also taken it, as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my dyspepsia disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. Today my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It clears and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 303 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE OLD KITCHEN CLOCK.

BY AUNT HEFFE.

Listen to the kitchen clock!
To itself it ever talks.
From the place it never walks;
"Tick-tock-tick-tock"
Tell me what it says.

'Tis a very patient clock,
Never cared by love or fear,
Though I've had it for many a year;
Tick-tock-tick-tock!
That is what it says.

'Tis a very truthful clock
Never flattering to my face,
Truth is written on my face;
Tick-tock-tick-tock,"
That is what it says.

'Tis a very active clock;
For I go while you're asleep,
Though you never take a peep;
Tick-tock-tick-tock"
That is what it says.

'Tis a most obliging clock,
Ever ready to hear me strike,
Yet may do it when you like;
Tick-tock-tick-tock."
That is what it says.

What a talkative old clock!
Let us see what it will do
When the pointer reaches two;
"Tick-tock-tick-tock,"
That is what it says.

NORA'S STORY.

BY CLIO STANLEY.

The melancholy days of which poets sing had come to earth, and in truth they were the saddest of the year.

All that summer the world had seemed a green place, made for love and happiness. One day after another had been ushered in like a sweet guest, one of approval, and the nights closing over them had made them beautiful memories.

"Who could be anything but happy?" I had asked myself the question again and again; now I laughed bitterly at the thought of my lasting happiness coming to me.

I had spent three months at this old farmhouse among the mountains, gaining strength with every day, until, when I looked at my own face in the glass, it seemed like a new face.

Years ago I had been called "lovely Nora," but since I had been poor, and worked for my living, the roses had faded in my cheeks, the light had died in my once laughing eyes, and loveliness had ceased away the smiles.

But this summer I had found new friends, and all the world had blossomed again.

I remember so well that day on the hillside, when, tired with a long ramble, I had thrown myself down on a grassy ledge, and sat looking off over the quiet valley, thinking that I was glad to have health and strength again, even to spend it in downright hard work.

Suddenly there came from out the shadow of the great oaks the figure of a man. Brown and travel-stained, yet with a frank, honest expression that won him a friend at once.

"It is five years, and I am here!" he said, gravely, coming up to me and holding out both his hands.

"Five years?" I said, looking up with curiosity. "I don't think I could forget a friend in that time. I am quite sure we are strangers."

His face crimsoned and a sterner look came over it.

"Did I not promise you I would come with or without a fortune? We shall have to wait for the fortune, but we surely are the best friends, Clara?"

"You have made a mistake," I stammered, "I am not Clara, but Nora."

He looked amazed. I knew I was looking like a little goose!

"If it was Clara Rood you expected to see, others have made the same mistake; they look as she did five years ago; she is really my cousin, you know, only—"

"Only what?"

It was humiliating, but it must be said.

"Only one made left all the money to Clara, when he died, and—we have not been best friends." And once more I turned away.

But gently he laid a detaining hand on my arm.

"This then is 'lovely Nora?' Pardon me, but I have often heard your uncle call you that. But I thought you were the heiress."

"I thought so, too, I faltered, "but Clara came—and saw and conquered." And I tried to smile.

"And you were left out in the cold?"

"It did seem pretty cold when those I had thought my friends dropped off one by one, but I have found better ones since, and I am quite happy."

Once more I turned away.

But he hastened along the little path that was hardly wide enough for two, and, taking my basket, said:

"If you are Clara's cousin we must be friends at least. Your uncle once asked me to his house to meet you, so you will not refuse my friendship now?"

"Your friendship? Oh, no! I have not so many friends that I can refuse one."

So he carried my basket, and began to tell me the story of his travels as we went back to the old farm-house.

I left him at the door and ran up to my room to dress for tea.

That evening I heard marvelous stories of adventure, and felt almost as if I myself had been half-way round the world.

The next morning Clara came, and Robert Hervey was quite the devoted lover she expected.

Still there were times when we were all together in the little world of cool green shadows on the mountain-side, and I could listen to the pleasant stories he told of far off lands and people, forgetting time and place, until Clara would say:

"I never could go into raptures over things, so don't expect it, Robert! I really don't see how Nora manages to get up so much enthusiasm."

And then I would blush guiltily and go away, because I knew in my own heart that it was his voice and kind glance that made the stories so charming.

One day when Clara had been teasing me, and had driven me almost to tears, she followed me to my room, and threw herself down in the easiest chair.

"So you really think he is nice, Nora? What would you give to be in my place?"

"Clara," I said indignantly, "how dare you insult me?"

"My dear child, if you call that an insult to offer you something you are dying to have, you must have a strange imagination."

"It is an insult!" I cried. "How dare you say it?"

"Relaxed, my dear! I may as well tell you that I don't intend to marry him! He is altogether too conceited for a poor man and I think my money will bring me some one more to my taste. The truth is I have outgrown him since he went away, and I told him so this afternoon!"

"Clara, you are certainly beside yourself! You could not outgrow Robert Hervey in a lifetime!"

"You may think so," she said quickly; "but even so, I don't want a superior being for a husband, who will expect me to look up to him all my life, take my opinions at his hands, and have none of my own. It may suit you—but it doesn't suit me!"

"And you have told him this?" I said.

"Not in so many words; but I said I was quite sure we were not suited to each other, and, in it, I thought you would suit him better."

We had not felt much love for each other since uncle died; but the little kind feeling I had tried to retain was utterly destroyed by that speech.

I shall leave here to-morrow," I said, quietly, "and I hope I may never see your face again."

Clara laughed—a hurtful, mocking laugh—which rang in my ears for many a day. "You don't half appreciate my generosity, I fear, Nora.

"Leave my room, please."

"Then you will really go? Well, I have done what I could for you."

I left the next morning, without bidding any of my friends good-by. I was too angry and heart-sore to want to see any one, least of all Robert Hervey.

After that day days were gloomy enough. I plunged eagerly into work, thinking thus to tire my restless heart, but work never seemed so hard before. Sometimes I was persuaded to go out, trying in society to find relaxation, but to-day the great woods held a sting for me, and pleasant faces only called back to me memories of brown-bearded face and laughing eyes that had looked down into mine.

And so a winter passed away, and I felt that life was over for me.

And constantly Robert Hervey's face was before me, and his voice, like music, beside me, until I became ill, and after lying for days between life and death, I was weak as a new-born babe.

One night I woke and knew that I was in a strange place, with surroundings that were not my own, yet seemed to be half known to me.

I murmured something about school, and a soft hand touched mine, and warm fingers closed about my own. I turned my head slowly, to meet a gentle, loving face, with such a winning look in the eyes that it brought tears to my eyes to see it.

"Where am I?" I whispered, faintly, for I found when I tried to speak I had not much strength.

"With friends who love you," a voice whispered back; "but you must sleep now and not think." And back to my surprise I found myself obedient as a little child.

I only said, softly, "Dear, good-by." And then I slept such a sweet, refreshing sleep that when morning came I had all I could stand securely on my feet again, if I were so put down.

The beautiful girl who had been by me when I had woke was with me again, but would only say she was a sister of one of my people, and I must be good and not ask questions until I could get up.

Her gay, laughing stories charmed me, and I grew stronger every day, until one morning she said I was to be dressed, and try a great sleepy-hollow chair which had been brought into my room.

"And then," she said, "you shall see your pupil, and you will find out who I am."

And she sat down to kiss me on my cheek.

"I don't care now," I said, quickly. "My curiosity is all gone."

But when I was dressed and put into the great chair, and she left me to send my little scholar in, I found my heart was in a flutter with curiosity. There were many among them I had been fond of, who could it be we four of me?

A step behind me, and a voice said, softly:

Oh, whose voice was it! It thrilled me with a pleasure that was almost pain.

"Nora! lovely Nora!" And some one came round to the side of my chair and took my hand.

I opened my eyes, for I had closed them at the first sound of that voice, and saw Robert Hervey standing before me.

"Mr. Hervey! how came you here?" exclaiming overtaking with a very blank "and—where is my little scholar?"

"Not so little, Nora! I reach at feet in my stockings; but truly your scholar. Ah, many the sweet lessons I learned of you on the mountain-side, lessons of hope and trust and patience, lost of all, lessons of love, Nora. And now will you take me for your scholar for life?"

"Oh! and Clara," it was all I could say.

A rush of happy tears drowned every other word.

"Do not speak of her, Nora. Only tell me, are you glad to see me?"

"Glad? Oh, yes, so glad!" But then I began to wonder again where I was.

I think I must have been faint for an instant, for I found his sister beside me holding a glass of water to my lips.

"Yes," he said, when we tried to explain; "it is my dear sister Rose, who came here when I found you ill, turned my bachelor apartment into a sort of sanctuary, and nursed me out. But when I knew you were well, I could not stay away."

Rose had taken one hand in her gentle clasp, and I put the other out to him.

"Is it mine?" he said, softly.

But I only held his hand close and smiled. Would all the world tempt me to let it go!

It is only one short week since he came, but it seems like a long dream of joy.

Thank God, it is a reality! Clara is welcome now to the fortune that should have been mine.

I have my fortune here.

Bruising to Some Purpose.

In a skirmish during the war of the rebellion, Augustus Penny, a Maine soldier, lost a finger, and afterward wrote a rhyming description of the affair to his wife. In lieu of other evidence, Mrs. Penny has been accepted at the Pension Office as a proof of Augustus' right to a pension.

The Death of Stonewall Jackson.

Dr. Tucker, from Richmond, arrived on Saturday, and all that human skill could devise was done to stay the hand of death. He suffered no pain to-day, and his breathing was less difficult, but he was evidently hourly growing weaker.

When his child was brought to him, to-day, he played with it for some time, frequently caressing it, calling it his "little comforter." At one time he raised his wounded hand above its head, and closing his eyes for some moments, silently engaged in prayer. He said to me, "I see from the number of physicians, that you think my condition dangerous, but I thank God, it is His will, that I am ready to go." About daylight on Sunday morning, Mrs. Jackson informed him that his recovery was very doubtful, and that it was better that he should be prepared for the worst. He was silent for a moment, and then said: "It will be infinite gain to be translated to heaven." He advised his wife, in the event of his death, to return to her father's home, and added: "You have a kind and good father, but there is no one so kind and good as your Heavenly Father." He still expressed a love of his recovery, but requested her, if he should die, to have him buried in Lexington, in the valley of Virginia. His animation decreased so rapidly that, at eleven o'clock, Mrs. Jackson left by his bed, and told him that before she can went he was will be with his Saviour. He replied: "Oh, no, you are frightened, my child, death is not so near. I may get well." She did not leave him, but weeping bitterly, and told him again that the physicians said there was no hope. After a moment's pause, he asked her to call me. "Doctor," he informs me that you have told her that I was to die to-day. Is it so?" When he was answered he turned his eyes toward the ceiling, and gazed for a moment or two, as if in intense thought, then replied: "Very good, very good. It is all right." He then tried to comfort his almost heart-broken wife, and told her he had a good deal to say to her, but he was too weak. Colonel Pendleton came into the room about one o'clock, and he asked him, "Who is preaching at head quarters to-day?" When told that the whole army was praying for him, he replied: "Tell God—they are very kind." He said: "It is the Lord's day; my work is fulfilled. I have always desired to die on Sunday."

His mind now began to fail and wander, and he frequently talked as if in command upon the field, giving orders in his old way; then the scene shifted, and he was at the communion table, conversation with members of his staff; now with his wife and child; now in prayers with his military family. Occasional intervals of return of his mind would appear, and during one of them, I offered him some brandy and water, but he declined it, saying, "It will only delay my departure, and do no good; I want to preserve my mind, if possible, to the last." About half-past one he was told that he had but two hours to live, and he answered again, loudly, but firmly, "Very good, it is all right." A few moments before he died, he cried out in his delirium, "Order A. P. Hill to prepare for action; pass the infantry to the front rapidly; tell Maj. Hawks—then stopped, leaving this sentence unfinished. Presently, a smile of ineffable sweetness spread itself over his pale face, and he said, quietly, as if with an expression as if of relief, "Let us cross over the river, and rest under the shade of the trees." And then, without pain or the least struggle, his spirit passed from earth. Dr. Hunter McGuire, who gave it.—Dr. Hunter McGuire, his attending physician.

Broadrimes Who Are Up to Snuff.

The gentle Quaker is to be found at almost every summer resort along the New Jersey coast, and he is a fixture and a feature of the lake and mountain resorts of Pennsylvania. In your mind's eye you picture him with a venerable beard, bald-head, broad-brimmed hat, and buckle shoes, but your mind's eye is way off. In a great many instances "William" keeps an hotel, and he is generally found behind the bar to make things snap. Any one who takes for a mose-lack will presently hear something drop.

"Yes, I'm a Quaker, and they call me William as a guest walks up to the register.

That's all right and proper, and visions of first-floor rooms at $7 per week float through a man's mind.

"Will thou tarry with me?" inquires William in a voice as soft as butter.

You will. That's what you've come for. You register your name and ask for a room.

"I know I can satisfy thee," observes William as he leads the way. "I suppose thee prefers the first floor?"

Thee does. He is shown a bedroom a trifle larger than a coffin, without a bell, gas, or other conveniences, and kindly informed that he can tarry a week for $22. If he should so far forget himself as to remain two weeks a reduction of $1 per week would be made.

"I have still others to show thee," says William, and you finally accept of a room and stay your week, because you can't do better. William knows the ropes on you, and he knows it. Candles are cheaper than gas, and he knows you'll come to the office to repeat your wants or let them go unrelieved. His beds are hard as boards, but people sleep on them in preference to the floor. His table won't compare with an ordinary country hotel, but you must eat or go hungry. The water softly flows and thoms you, but the office is dishwater and the butter stale. At the office thee is told to make thyself at home, but the price of cigars, billiards, and bowls create the impression of highway robbery.

Thee can't get a bathing suit any cheaper of William than of the Hebrew on the corner. His wagon charges thee just as much for a ride, and his porter wants fees, and his bootblack grabs for his dime the same as at the tavern of the ungodly. If you get beer, it is brought to you covertly, as if Willam was ashamed; but the beer is execrable, the bottle is a chent, and the price exorbitant. William professes to serve thee with milk at the table, but he waters it. He talks of dairy butter, but serves thee with a mockery. He tells thee there are no mosquitoes, and thus saves the expense of screens, while you fight the pests all night.

In fact, Old Broadbrim is up to snuff at all the resorts, and you've got to get drowned with all your cash on your person to get ahead of him for even a nickel. Ivory "dice" costs you fifteen cents, and it is never more than two "throws" for a quarter.—Detroit Free Press.

In Connemara.

The rain was still falling when Ballynahinch was left behind; but on the moor to the left two witchlike figures were seen, their heads half wrapped in plaid shawls, their limbs showing through wet, short skirts, and their small red feet and legs flying from tuft to tuft of the moss. They were native girls, carrying the small coal-black cattle of these wild uplands, and the sight of the drivers, an ancient friend, put them in the wildest spirits. They swooped down on the car and were soon seated, laughing and singing, brushing the wet from their tangled hair and their hair from their red cheeks, but not forgetting to smooth the skirts of the rough homespun, modestly about their bare extremities. They were redolent of peat smoke, like the potcen their brewers in spite of all the constables; of good health, good humor, and of that unmerchantable fragrance which comes from living almost entirely out of doors.

Presently we drew up before their own house. They seized various parcels coming to them from Galway, and with a twinkling they plunged into a comfortable-looking cabin of large size like a brace of colts, with a flourish of their red heels. The men and boys of the family wore shoes; doubtless Sunday there some same kind lass a little out as well shod as any in Connemara. The cabin was thoroughly in keeping with the United States puzzling an American mistress by their ignorance on some points and unnatural acquirements in others. If she could see the interior of some cabins she would only wonder how they ever learn to use the appliances of "modern improvements." Much is being done in Ireland to give all children a good schooling in the elements of book wisdom, but there is no provision for the training of servants, wherefore there is much wailing in American households, great misunderstandings, and many chances of profitable places lost to this class of emigrants. For this reason it is to be hoped that our young friends, when better clothed, housed, and fed than they are now, will be no longer so jolly and devil-may-care.—Cor. New York Times.

Fearless General Rosecrans.

"General Rosecrans was the most fearless, as well as the most popular, man in the Union army during the war," said a veteran officer, "and I know of one incident. Some years ago he was experimenting with nitro-glycerine and elaborate of potash. He was also trying to make a new kind of percussion cap. Every afternoon he would go out to the old stone-quarry and make experiments with dynamite there. He never had granted him permission to do so. He had taken quite a fancy to me, and he'd come around and take me out there with him. I never saw a man experiment with explosives as carelessly as he did, and, as I did not care to be blown to pieces myself, I kept warning him of the risks he kept incurring. His only reply was: 'When a man's time comes it comes.' He appeared to be a fatalist, and would not believe that a person could be killed before it was allotted for him to die. One day he had some nitro-glycerine in a pan and was doing something with it. I knew it would explode in the hot sun and said: 'General, look out. That's going to explode.' He did not seem to care, and I warned him again, but he kept on with his experiments, repeating that 'phrase of his about a man's time coming only when it was appointed for him to die. He needed some that was lying a short distance off and went out to get it. He was about twenty or thirty yards off when the nitro-glycerine exploded. It did not disconcert him in the least. He remained without any emotion: 'Well, that was a pretty close call,' and resumed his experiments. I was astonished at the way he ever escaped death out there."

A Rara Avis.

"Are you in need of any curiosities?" asked a lady, addressing the proprietor of a dime museum.

"We are always on the lookout for curiosities," he replied, "and willing at all times to enter into negotiations for the exhibition of anything extraordinary. What have you got? A giant, dwarf, a monstrosity—"

"A rare curiosity," answered the lady, "in short, I have a servant girl who is not only neat and tidy, and understands her duties, but is also polite and ladylike in speech and manner, and does not ask for more than a night in a week.

"Good gracious, madam! you don't say so! Why, she will be a prize for us—prize! why, there is nothing like her in this country. Bring her along at once, and she can name her own salary."—Boston Courier.

AMONG THE NEGROES.

Remnants of Picturesque Barbarity Still Visible in the South.

I visited a colored church last winter expecting to be entertained with some quaint plantation specimens of devotion; but, bless you, everything was modern and proper. The preacher, a handsome young mulatto, was correct in his speech, and his logic was just as good and uninteresting as I might have heard from any of his white contemporaries.

As a reward of perseverance I found my type of old-fashioned worship in a colored low-feast, where each one got happy after the manner of his own heart without regard to previous condition of servitude or the restraints of emancipation. One old aunty shook herself from side to side, making a strange noise with her mouth like the inflating of a bellows. "Aunty," said some one to her on coming out, "you've been very happy, but why did you make that queer noise with your mouth?" "O, honey, I'se a suckin' in de breff ob de Lord."

I found another pious old uncle who, though his devotion seemed sufficiently ardent, assured me "dat was nothin' like hit was fo de war." I said, by way of drawing him out: "The innocent seem to suffer with the guilty; how do you account for it?" "Yes, miss," said he, "dat is little say de wheat and de tares am lowed to grow up together 'til de harvest time come, den de wheat am gathered into de barn and de tares am frowed into de unquenchable fire."

Capt. Price Williams, of the celebrated Mobile Rifles, who led them in their victorious charge at Shiloh, in his office as Judge of the Probate Court often meets with amusing incidents from both the going and the coming races. A colored man taking out a marriage license was asked the usual questions: "How old is the woman you want to marry?"

"Well, boss! I spose she's 'bout 15."

"Then she is under age, and you will have to get the consent of her parents."

"O, boss, you knows de gals always try to make dar selves young, but I am sevar she's 20."

"Do you swear to that?" Up went the hand.

"How old are you?"

"Well, I'se 35, but I kin be older if necessary."

I walked into my room one day and found a respectable-looking young colored man had been employed to wash the windows. I thought if it were in his line he might do some other work for me, so I said in a patronizing way: "Uncle, what is your business?" He raised himself to his full height on the ladder, and, flourishing the mop over his head, he answered with a proud smile, "Politician."

Yo gods! I fell down—metaphorically—in a dead faint.

At the exposition in New Orleans I saw an old black man, a friend of former days, trying to sell a patent swing. I said: "Uncle Steve, you haven't studied science?"

"No, miss," said he, "I has others to do dat for me."

Notwithstanding the advantage of education, the negro dialect dies hard. A colored modiste, who was fitting a dress for me, stood off admiringly, and in a burst of enthusiasm exclaimed: "I do fit beautiful!" I looked at her and said: "You are a graduate of Kosmen Institute, I believe." She took the rebuke at once, but answered: "That's the way they talk at house." "But what was the use of your going to school?" I asked. She said: "Yes, they were proud to send me, but sometimes, when I use different language from them, they say I am full of stuck-up-ativeness, so I just drop down to them."

I was calling upon a lady. The servant who answered the door had evidently come from her sweeping. She had a red tablecover tucked around her waist over a blue dress; a newspaper twisted into a sugar-loaf peak inside a cap for her well-shaped head; she wore a pair of large hoop earrings; her face was bronze; she stood erect and looked an Ethiopian queen. Plainly she said, "Mrs. ——— is out, but during her absence I can invite you in."

No Southern landscape is without the gay coloring, the picturesque barbarity of the African race. So much splendid rubbish is in their lives it would seem as if some day in the course of human progress that race that fat-off isle of spices, from the eternal summers of Africa's burning sands would come a development of art, more gay in splendor, more warm in color than our colder race has ever dreamed of.

The Queen of Africa is the Goddess Isis, and her throne is decked with the attributes of fecundity. The lotus is her scepter, the calyx of the flower of love. She wears a vulture on her brow, the bird that never cries enough, and above this she wears the insignia of the fruitful cow to denote maternity.

From the Goddess Isis to the old negro mammy just going off the stage of life the symbols are the same. With round, shining face, fat and full of years, crowned with maternity, she is queen regent of the little cabin home, taking care of the black babies, the heroes and statesmen in disguise of the coming race.

She still depends on the basket of food and bundle of clothes sent by the pretty white lady who was once a baby at her breast and who realizes that the good Lord often gives his blessing twice over, but he never gives but one old mammy.

The picture of home life in the South will be incomplete when they have entirely disappeared. The going race, who have watched over your infancy, flocked you for marriage, and wept over your graves.—Lizzie York Case, in Detroit Free Press.

A Grey Squirrel Colony.

William Penn Tuttle, a farmer living on the Dover point road, has for some time past been engaged in leisure hours cultivating and promoting the grey squirrel industry, until he has to-day in a belt of woods near his residence several hundred of the nimble, beady-tailed, running creatures, running to about whitherever they will, some of them tame as kittens, others wild as hawks, and really the most interesting and funny lot of free critters ever seen in these parts. In fact, his "woods are full of em," and he takes infinite pleasure in seeing them frisk about over the fences, up and down the trees, and in and out of their holes.

It has not been an unfrequent occurrence in the past to see dozens of them all at once running around the house or chattering away from the window-sills in the family inside. Once or twice every day in this cold wintry season the farmer visits the woods with a supply of corn and other things which they will eat, and so he oppressions some of the nimble things can be seen skipping toward him from all directions, and as soon as he throws out the corn they are on hand to pick it up, and look whole, over way he may be can see them sitting erect, taking their rations in the heartiest fashion.

On being asked how he keeps the cats and dogs from devouring them and the candal logs from climbing and destroying them utterly, he said no cat dared to touch one of them, for a dozen would be on the feline's back at once and kill him outright; and as for dogs, they are not spry enough to catch one if they tried ever so hard. As for the gunner, who might go for them for game he had rigidly forbidden anybody and everybody to venture with a gun upon the premises at all, under the extreme penalties of the law, which he would certainly enforce if a shot should be fired. The law gives him just the same right to keep and propagate his squirrels as it does his horses, cattle and swine, and everybody knows that he intends to exercise the right and "come down" on anybody who invades it. And that is correct. Nobody trespasses or interferes, and when he wants a squirrel pie he has it.—Dover (N. H.) Democrat.

McCullough and Ralston.

After the death of Ralston, the backer in the California theater, McCullough found that $60,000 paid in by him to the bank had not been placed to his credit. Before producing the receipts for the payments he said:

"If this transaction will reflect on Ralston's memory I will tear up the papers."

The matter was never satisfactorily explained, and McCullough found it necessary to continue his tour as a star to make money enough to meet his debts.—Overland Monthly.

A woman in Wing's Station, N. Y., has given birth to twenty-five children and she is not fifty years old.

The old-time Virginians were a proud set. There once lived in Henrico County a Sir Patrick Coutts, who was a regular "blood." Some distance from him lived another "blood," one Col. William Byrd. It chanced that the two fell sick and daily expected death. Col. Byrd dispatched an outrider to Sir Patrick with the message: "Do not go before I get ready." In reply Sir Patrick said: "Tell Col. Byrd that when Patrick Coutts gets ready he waits for no man." Coutts died the next day and Byrd soon followed.

Does It Pay?

Three-fourths of our people are troubled with dyspepsia or liver complaint in some form or other, which by nature of the disease has a depressing influence on the mind or body, preventing them from thinking or acting clearly in any matter of importance. Indigestion, coming up of food after eating, dyspepsia, sick headache, acidity of the stomach or any derangement of the stomach or liver (upon which the whole action of our system depends) are speedily and effectually overcome by the use of Green's August Flower. The most stubborn cases have yielded to its influence, as thousands of letters received will testify. The immense sale of this medicine is another guarantee of its merits, over a million and a half bottles sold last year; do as we do, will it pay you to suffer from dyspepsia or liver complaint when a dollar invested in the August Flower, (three doses will prove its worth. It is sold by all druggists and general dealers in all parts of the world. 2

Brace Up.

You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with headache, you are fidgety, nervous, and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicine, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whiskey, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an alterative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of liver and kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, and only 50 cents a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store. 3

The above Eyeglass invented by the Johnston Optical Co. of Detroit, Mich., combines the best features of all others.

1st. The frame springs from the ear enough away that the eyeglasses will not touch them, a thing not always easy to do with other eye-glasses.

2d. The guards are set so as to clasp the nose back under eye-brows which prevents slipping off on the nose.

3d. The pressure is on the bridge part of the nose where the bone, which prevents irritation.

4th. The lens frame secures in perfect adjustment to the nose whether large or small.

5th. The lenses are set at right angles to line of vision.

6th. They can be worn safely without cord or chain as there is no danger of falling off.

7th. We warrant them to be the easiest eyeglasses in the market.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Shay have gone to Boyne City to attend court.

Benj. Madill and wife have just returned from Big Rapids, having been called there by the illness of Mrs. Madill's brother, Wm. Frink.

The weather looks now as if winter had come in earnest, and the men are already beginning to cut and skid logs.

We have a steamboat now on the lake and last week she towed the largest raft of logs from the head of Bundlatte lake to the mill, that has ever been on the lake. The load will be fitted up this winter and be ready in the spring to carry passengers and freight between this place and Bellaire.

A TRAGEDY.

The Sad Sequel of Anticipated Joy in a New Land.

It was 4 a. m. The first gray Carts of approaching dawn shot up in the east and tinged the murky sky and the throbbing ocean as the City of Rome plowed relentlessly on her course for this port. In the dim morning twilight a tragedy was being enacted to at least one person on the steamer's deck.

Resting on two black stands near the steamer's bulwark lay a sad burden. It was the body of a passenger laid out on a rough board, loaded with lead at the heels, and covered by the red flag of the British nation. Four blue-clad sailors stood with sap in hand about the bier while a priest recited prayers for the repose of the dead man's soul read by the light of a lantern held by a sailor.

Two beautiful women gazed at the mournful spectacle. The younger was in a passion of grief, her bosom heaving with convulsive sobs which the other strove in vain to soothe.

She was a beautiful girl winsome even in her great grief. Her black hair hung in disheveled masses about a flushed, well-rounded face, and her large blue eyes kept turning beseechingly toward the clergyman as she kept exclaiming:

"He is not dead! O, tell me he is not dead!"

The father had finished his sacred office. The four strong sailors stepped and lifted the rude bier to the bulwark of the ship, one end of the plank was raised high, and the dead man's body slid overboard, feet foremost, and was heard to plunge into the sea.

The poor distracted girl gave one gasp and was clasped fainting in the arms of the other lady.

This lady was Mrs. Frank Leslie and the girl was a poor Irish immigrant left almost alone in the world by the death of her old uncle.

Several years ago Patrick McNaugher came to this country, and by frugal living and hard work acquired a little property. Last summer he was informed that his brother Tom had died in Ireland, leaving one son and one daughter in destitute circumstances. Mr. McNaugher's heart was moved and he hastened to the other side of the water to see these unfortunate kinsfolk.

John, a sturdy youth, and Rose, a bright, courageous lassie of 17, were sorrowing orphans who bashfully greeted their kinsman on his arrival. The old man had no children of his own, and soon loved both of them with a tenderness he had never felt before.

The pretty Rose was soon her uncle's favorite, but Mr. McNaugher never tired of telling John of the great region he would see in America and of the high place he would make for John if he applied himself to work.

The young people were evidently much frightened at the dangers of the ocean, and upon their bereavement seemed to prey upon their minds, despite the attempts of Mr. McNaugher to keep them cheerful. Rose clung to her uncle as though he were all she had in the world, as indeed he was, but John was wont to wander listlessly and moodily about the vessel. It was the charming sight of the gentle Rose lingering lovingly about her aged uncle that first attracted the attention of the wealthy and kind-hearted Mrs. Leslie.

When two days out at sea heavy winds frightened the immigrant passengers. John McNaugher was nowhere to be seen. Rose discovered later kneeling bareheaded on the deck, while she stood dazed and unnerved and praying distractedly. When the steward tried to persuade him to come in he replied he must not be interrupted, as his godfather was dying, was angry with him and had hidden her face.

It took three strong men to bring him in, when he was so violent that he had to be placed in the infirmary, where he tore everything to pieces.

There was no doubt of his insanity, and the incident made a deep impression on all aboard. As for the old uncle, he was nearly beside himself and the shock must have caused his death, for he was found stark and stiff in his berth the next morning, having ruptured a blood-vessel.

Thus it happened that while her brother was raving Rose was dead, was chanting a requiem over the body of her uncle poor Rose McNaughar stood sobbing on the deck in the gray morning twilight, friendless in the world. Of all the hundreds of passengers on the City of Rome, Mrs. Frank Leslie was the only one to rise and comfort the bereaved girl at that ocean burial.

The passengers, stimulated by Mrs. Frank Leslie, made up a purse for the orphan maid of $150.—New York Journal.

Dr. S. G. Howe was found once by Francis Bird with his feet swathed in flannels and extended upon a chair. Calling the next day and finding him in like position, he said: "Howe, what is the matter?" "I have the gout," said Howe. "You have the gout—such a temperance man as you?" "Yes," said the great philanthropist—"yes, Bird, my ancestors drank wine, and I must foot the bills."—Chicago Living Church.

Greeley's Wakeful Sleep.

On another occasion, says Oliver Johnson, I went with him (Horace Greeley) to hear a discourse from Rev. William Henry Channing. It was Sunday morning, and the topic announced was one in which he felt a special interest. Mr. Channing was then, in fact, ministering to a congregation of which Mr. Greeley was a prominent member. It was in a hall on the west side of Broadway, above Canal street, where Dr. Dewey had preached sometime. On the way thither Mr. Greeley begged me to keep him awake. We occupied a settee within six feet of the platform, and right under the eye of the preacher. I tried to keep him awake by frequent tuggings at his elbow and elevating a few means soft tattoo upon his ribs. But it was of no use. He was "sound nodding" through the whole discourse, not a little to Mr. Channing's annoyance, who observed my unsuccessful efforts to keep his great auditor awake. But now comes the wonderful part of my story. Mr. Greeley and I, when the service was over, went back to the Tribune office together. He sat down to his desk at once, and made an abstract of Mr. Channing's discourse, filling somewhat less than a column, which appeared in the Tribune next morning. Mr. Channing was utterly amazed when he saw it, and afterward asked me if it was possible Mr. Greeley had made the report. When I told him that I saw him while he was preparing it, and could certify that it went to the compositor in his own handwriting, and that, moreover, I had myself read the proof, he expressed the greatest astonishment. "Why," said he, "I could not myself have made so accurate an abstract of my own discourse, which, though premeditated, was extemporaneous. He has not only given the substance of what I said; he has followed my line of thought, and remembered not a little of my language." I do not pretend to offer any explanation of this strange mental fact. But I am absolutely certain of the facts as I have related them, and that which had the appearance of unpardonable sleep was in reality a condition in which the mental faculties were somehow awake and active.

Lightning Holes.

Prof. Brun has published in the Archives de Geneve an interesting study on the so-called lightning holes, to be found in the High Alps. He and other investigators have found them at heights of from 3,548 to 4,000 metres, or between 11,000 and 13,000 feet above the sea level. Usually they are found on summits. Sometimes the rocky mass, which has been vitrified in the passage of the electric fluid, presents the appearance of small scattered pearls, sometimes of a series of semispherical cavities only a few millimetres in diameter. Sometimes there are vitrified veins proceeding from a central point to a distance of four or five inches. Sometimes a block detached from the mass appears as if bored through by a cannon-ball, the hollowed passage being quite vitrified. The inclosures of this vitrified coating or stratum never exceed a few millimetres and is sometimes not more than the quarter of an inch in depth. The varying colors which it presents depend on the qualities and composition of the rock. The same may be said as to its transparency. On the Bonglisberm the glass thus formed by the lightning is bleb-coloured to the quantity of actinolith which the rock contains. It is brown on La Ruinette, the rock consisting of feldspar mixed with gneiss containing chloride of iron. Under the microscope interior cavities, which must be attributed to the presence of water in the rock at the moment of melting by the electric discharges. This vitrified material has no influence on polarized light.

He Hoped For The Best.

Mrs. Jones had joined a French class and was telling her husband how well she was getting along. "I am afraid," he said, "that it is nothing but a spasm. I've known people before who would tackle a foreign language, expecting to know all about it in a month, and by that time they could translate 'The son of the baker who has the loaf of bread of the daughter of the gardener,' in some such rude manner as that, and had bought a few pounds worth of foreign books, their enthusiasm would die away like the morning mist." Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The will of Don Thomas Terry of Adair, a Cuban planter, was filed in New York. The estate is valued at $60,000,000, and was left to his twelve children.

Henry George was denounced at a socialist meeting in New York on the ground that he now repudiates their doctrines.

Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, has written a pastoral letter, in which he takes strong ground against Henry George's theories in reference to the ownership of property. On the question of marriages he declares that the contracting parties will hereafter be required to appear in church and before the altar, except where both of them are not Catholics. On the question of burials he holds that no Catholic can be buried with the church rites except in consecrated ground.

A man claiming to be Nathan Schuyler, who was arrested at Albany during its bi-centennial celebration, on suspicion of having sinister designs on the President, again attempted to assault Mr. Cleveland at New York, last week, and even tried to climb upon the seat of his carriage. He made his escape, however, when he saw the officers moving in his direction.

William Reed, Treasurer of the South Boston Horse-Railroad Company, has been arrested for embezzling $30,000.

At a conference of Jewish rabbis, held in New York, it was resolved to petition Congress for the enactment of a national marriage law.

A fire in Cincinnati burned nearly $600,000 worth of clothing in the stores of Mack, Stadler & Co. and Marcus Tuchheimer & Co.

A disastrous wreck occurred on the Illinois Central Railroad, near Savoy, Ill., killing Albert Hudson, a merchant of Savoy. John McDonald, a stockbuilder of Urbana, St. Todd, a blacksmith of Champaign, and James Near, engineer, of Champaign. The freight train was standing on the track at the station when a fast freight was being unloaded, and a stock freight train came up behind at full speed and dashed into the standing train. The night was very dark, and the rain was pouring down. It is supposed that the dense darkness obscured the light. Engineer Near was not found for a long time, and was badly scalded. His head was despite ed, and was found several yards from the train.

At Alameda, Cal., customs officers seized $25,000 worth of opium at the residence of Charles R. Bronson.

Chicago elevators contain 10,655,000 bushels of wheat, 4,980,000 bushels of corn, 929,397 bushels of oats, 133,272 bushels of rye, and 417,000 bushels of barley; total, 15,446,628 bushels of all kinds of grain, against 14,591,962 bushels a year ago.

The Directors of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Road are carefully considering the advisability of extending northward to Chicago. The surveyed routes range from 400 to 600 miles. The bonds to be issued will run fifty years at five per cent.

Baldwin Gardiner, President of the Pacific Stock Board at San Francisco, has disappeared. His owes $200,000, mainly to customers.

At Cleveland, Ohio, Wheeler, whose age is 81, was held without bail for murdering his wife, aged 82. The couple removed about $400,000, and it is believed that in a quarrel touching his wife's will the old man strangled her.

Bloomington (Ill.) dispatch: "Justice Scott, of the Illinois Supreme Court, has been asked by Leonard Swett and Captain Black to grant a supersedeas in the case of the Chicago anarchists. Counsel seem confident of securing the writ, which would defer the execution until April. The Justice spent the entire afternoon and evening yesterday in examining the record and brief, and it is expected that he will render an opinion within a few days."

SOUTHERN.

Recently organizers of the Knights of Labor have been busy among the sugarcane laborers in Louisiana, and numbers of the flood-lands have been initiated. One hundred hands on Captain Pierce's plantation, near Berwick, are on a strike for an increase of wages of fifty per cent.

A Baptist church was dedicated at Fairview, Ky., on the site of the building in which Jeff Davis was born. The Rev. Dr. Strickland, of Nashville, delivered the dedication sermon, and Davis was present. An immense crowd was there. After the sermon Davis entered the pulpit and made a few remarks. He then presented the church a wreath of solid silver. The church is a handsome brick structure, costing about $12,000. A finely polished slab of violet Tennessee marble set on the wall of the vestibule opposite the memorial window has this inscription in Roman capitals: "Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, was born June 3, 1808, on the plat of this church. He made a gift of this site March 1, 1886, to the Bethel Baptist Church as a thank offering to the Lord."

David Fender of Clinch County, Georgia, who recently died at the age of 105, made his coffin of pitch-pine before the outbreak of the rebellion, and preserved it until his death.

A new corporation—the South Pittsburg Railway and Iron Company—proposes to purchase 27,000 acres of land in Alabama, and will erect iron furnaces and other plant.

WASHINGTON.

Bishop Whipple has resigned as a member of the commission to negotiate with certain Indian tribes in the Northwest for the sale to the Government of portions of their reservations. Jared W. Daniels, of Minnesota, is his successor.

It is understood that the naval estimates are $10,000,000 less in amount than last year.

John T. Carey has been appointed by the President to be United States Attorney for the Northern District of California.

Mrs. Sarah H. Sampson, now receiving a salary of $1,400 as a clerk in the Pension Bureau, has received from President Cleveland a commission as Notary Public for the District of Columbia. During the war she distributed nursed sick and wounded soldiers.

The surrender of Geronimo, according to Gen. Miles, was an absolute one, and amounted in military law to the same thing as a capture.

The Postmaster General reports 5,041 postoffices, of which 2,294 are President. The highest postal paid, $2,500, is in Brooklyn. There are 181 free-delivery offices.

The annual report of the Signal Service Bureau claims that the forecasting of the arrival of cold waves has saved millions of property, as also has the flood warnings. Appropriations are asked for extending the service.

Commodore Schley, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in his annual report urges the necessity for two modern made steam cruiser training ships on the ground that it is only on such vessels that the training necessary for modern warfare can be given, and because the improvements in naval warfare have made it impossible to recruit our navy, in case of war, from merchant seamen or watermen of our seaports.

POLITICAL.

A New York dispatch says that unless the Republicans make unexpected gains by future recounts and contests, the New Jersey Legislature will consist of 41 Democrats, 20 Republicans, and 1 Labor member, and a Democrat will be chosen to succeed United States Senator Sewell. So far six recounts have been place, and the net result is a gain of one seat for the Democrats.

A. A. Ames, Democratic candidate for Governor of Minnesota in the late election, has commenced a contest for the office.

The official footings of the vote for State officers in Indiana at the late election show the election of the entire Republican ticket by the following pluralities: For Lieutenant Governor, R. S. Robertson, 5,272; Secretary of State, Charles F. Griffin, 3,085; Auditor, Bruce Carr, 1,077; Treasurer, J. A. Lemcke, 3,055; Attorney General, I. T. Michener, 3,520; Superintendent of Public Instruction, H. M. Jacobus, 9,047; Judge of the Supreme Court, Byron K. Elliott, 4,832; Clerk of the Supreme Court, W. T. Neth, 5,354. The total votes cast for Lieutenant Governor were Republican, 231,922; Democrat, 228,6; Prohibition, 9,185; National, 4,319.

The Republican candidates for Senator from Michigan are Messrs. Stockbridge, Ferry, Conger, and James McMillan.

The question of who is to be Lieutenant Governor of Indiana will go to the courts. The Secretary of State will refuse to issue a certificate of election to Robertson, which will bring the matter to a head.

Election returns from every county in Wisconsin are reported officially. Rusk's plurality is 18,718, against 19,930 in 1884. Lenoxe vote on the four candidates for Governor is as follows: Rusk, 105,242; Woodward, 114,539; Cochrane, Labor, 21,461; Olin, Prohibitionist, 17,010.

Jeffersonville (Ind.) dispatch: "The Commissioners appointed to recount the votes cast for Governor in the State Senate in only two majority have completed their labors. McClure passed six votes in the recount. McClure is a Democrat, and the Republicans designed sanguine hopes that a recount would place his opponent, Taggart, and thus make the Legislature a tie on joint ballot."

The official vote of Virginia, including Buchanan County, shows a total of 225, 4 1, divided as follows: Democratic, 102,221; Opposition consisting of independent Democrats, Republicans, etc.), 13,089; opposition majority, 89,8 5. In 1885 the total vote was 175,51, divided as follows: Lee (Dem.), 132, 541; Wise (Rep.), 195,169; Democratic majority, 16,628. The decrease of 62,73 in the popular vote is divided as follows: Democratic decrease, 30,320; Republican or Opposition decrease, 16,408. Buchanan County may increase the Opposition majority 1 0.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The gale that swept over the great lakes on the night of the 22d was one of the most violent and destructive experienced in years. Numerous wrecks, accompanied by serious loss of human life, are reported, and the money loss to vessel owners will reach many thousands of dollars. Two tow-barges, the Menekaunee and Manitowoc, passing Port Huron, towards Chicago, were wrecked four miles south of Fort-St. Mich., and fourteen lives lost. Every soul was shipped aboard the Menekaunee found a watery grave. One solitary sailor survived the wreck of the Manitowoc. A Mr. Ashley, of Port Huron, a sailor on his first trip—who tells a distressing story of the disaster.

At midnight, while aboard of Indianola, she came in contact with a heavy schooner, a barge. The few hands on board the steamer left as to our fate. "The Manitowoc was in tow ahead of us, so that we could not hold her a foot hold. She unslipped her towline, throwing the schooner. Then sprung a leak and water gained on us. We bailed her steadily, but finally taking fifteen feet in the hold, we gave up the ship. We left her at 1 o'clock, unalmast cut, which, in falling, took the foremast and mizzenhead. We were huddled in the cabin, where we built a temporary door to keep the water out. At 4 o'clock p. m. of Thursday the captain was washed overboard and drowned. Some hours after the mate was washed off a spring a leak, rendering her useless, and we let go anchor. At 12:30 o'clock Thursday night the ship struck the beach broadside and swung head to the sea. Some hundred yards from us was a big sail boat. Some huddled under the lee of the cabin, clinging to timber-heads. I took the mizzen rigging, the shrouds on Mar, clinging to it, crying piteously: 'Save me, oh, save me!' Some of the crew had taken off their clothes with her little children in their arms, a sight to fasten her. She could not get off the wreck, and suddenly gave up her hold and fell down across me, nearly knocking me off the rail into the boiling sea beneath me. Her little daughter, Minnie, only thirteen years old. Clinging to the rigging with one were 'French John' and Mr. Cumfrey. Some time must fell across the cabin. We then hung to the davits on her stern, the sea dashing over us. Cumfrey was lost. John Mr. Mr. Mr. washed off one after the other. Cumfrey and John tried to reach the shore, each taking a plank to bear him. I never was overwhelmed by the heavy sea and went to the bottom. When I came up I was within a few feet of the shore. I grappled a small piece of deck plank, and after a terrible struggle landed safely on the shore. The crew consisted of eight, all of whom with the exception of myself is at the bottom of the lake."

The Lucerne, a three-masted schooner, ore-laden, from Ashland to Cleveland, foundered and sank near Washburn, Wis., in sixteen feet of water. Three sailors were found frozen in the rigging, and it is supposed that the men comprising the rest of the crew were drowned. The crew of the steambarge Robert Wallace and of her consort, the Jay Cooke, numbering twenty-five each, near Marquette, were rescued by the Northern life-saving crew. The cargoes of both boats were valued at $100,000 and had no loss, but it is believed the craft can be saved.

At the close of the fiscal year the total number of postoffices was 53,644, besides 4,427 stamp offices, and these 57,71 were Presidential offices, divided as follows: First class, 76; second class, 149; third class, 1,759. In the fourth class there were 13,016. Adding all the other 2,295 were money-order offices, besides 92 money-order stations. Concerning appointments the report says:

The appointments of Postmasters during the last fiscal year numbered 40,000 of which 9,112 were made to fill vacancies occasioned by resignations or expired commissions, 587 to vacancies caused by death, 3,492 on the establishment of new offices, and 7,766 upon removals. Of the total number of appointments, 1,019 were made by yourself, the vacancies having occurred from the following causes, respectively—viz: By expiration of commission, 468; by resignations, 252; by deaths, 24; by removals or suspensions, 247; and to offices which had been assigned to the fourth to the third class, 47."

During the year the free-delivery service was extended to Aurora, Ill.; Duluth, Minn.; and Newport, Ky. The total number of carriers was 6,249, an increase of 483. The total cost of this branch of the service was $4,312,206, an increase of $426,554 over the previous year. The work done by the carriers is summed up as follows:

The number of pieces of mail matter, counting collections and deliveries, handled by the carriers during the year was 2,520,959, an increase over the previous year of 204,983,186, or 15 per cent., while the carriers increased but 11.06 per cent. in force.

The money-order system has been extended to 31 additional offices during the year, while 10 were discontinued.

During the year there were issued 7,940,000 domestic money orders, amounting to nearly $114,000,000; 5,950,428 postal notes, amounting to $11,116,000; and 420,123 international orders, aggregating $7,178,286.21; besides the transmission of foreign orders to a total amount of $4,000,000. The entire amount of business done was $1,214,506,38, less by $2,869,69 than the previous year.

The net establishing the special-delivery system limited its operations to 39 postoffices. During the full year of its issue—from the 1st of July, 1885, when it was received for special delivery at these offices, during the full year, the total amount of fees received from this source was $84,792, leaving a gross profit to the Government of $27,697. From the enlarged system, extending the privileges of the act to 53 postoffices and all cities and towns, the Postmaster General expects great results.

The total revenues of the department for the year were $45,918,412, and the excess of cost over revenue $8,324,117. Of the total appropriations for the year, amounting to $54,242,534, the entire outlay actually made and estimated to be made is but $46,629,100.61, leaving a balance to be eventually covered into the Treasury of $4,303,901.38.

Letter-sheet envelopes, the report says, have been long authorized, but no real attempt was made to introduce them until last October, when a contract was made with the owner of a patent, by which the Government was to furnish them without cost, and pays for only what it sells. So far the experiment appears to find popular favor, but the Postmaster General thinks longer experiment desirable before recommending the purchase of the patent and the manufacture by the Government.

The death letter office during the year handled 5,923,745 pieces of mail matter, of which number 186,444 were delivered unopened to the proper parties, and 305,373 foreign letters were returned to the country of origin. Of those opened about one-half were destroyed as undeliverable or valueless. Letters to the number of 12,138, containing money amounting to $17,578, besides 18,166 letters containing drafts, checks, or other instruments for the payment of money of the total face value of $1,121,184, were delivered to the owners. The revenue derived from dead letters was $13,000, and the cost of the office, aside from auction sale of unclaimed parcels, amounted to $8,872.27.

Postoffices were reported robbed to the number of 127, and 239 were burglarized; 95 postal cars were burned or wrecked, 27 mail stages and 7 mail messengers were robbed, 75 pouches were lost, and 197 reported stolen or missing, and 1,019 were robbed under the following facts:

For violation of postal laws during period were arrested, of whom 243 were in service and 417 were not; 110 were postmasters, assistants, or clerks, 127 mail-postal clerks, 24 letter-carriers, 17 mail-carriers, and 11 of various employments. Seventy-nine burglars and 31 former postmasters are included among the arrests outside of the service. The State courts took jurisdiction of 6 cases and the Federal courts of 626. Of the latter convictions followed in 214, acquittals in 36, trial waits in 226, and the residue were dismissed or failed of indictment.

A Washington special to the Chicago Daily News says:

Secretary Bayard is greatly distressed at the conduct of Minister Jeannette at Mexico and cannot trust himself to talk about it. A mild idea of the character of the dispatches received from that minister by the Secretary of State may be had from the following: Mr. Bayard is a friend of Senator Gibson and other Southern men, who have expressed great confidence in Manning's ability and character, and says that such indications as have come to him from Mexico and other quarters have strengthened him. But Jeannette begins here say that Manning's habit of going on a spree occasionally is well known in that State, and must have been known to the Southern Senators who recommended him. Jeannette is said to be one of that class of men in Southern States, stands high in his section, and is a member of the most aristocratic social circle, but has had this unfortunate habit all his life. If Manning is not sober and of good character, the Senate will undoubtedly reject his nomination. Jeannette's dispatches have put President Cleveland to be the only man who can be trusted to succeed Manning, and he may not be able to stand the intoxicating influences of the American climate.

UNCLE SAM'S MAIL.

Report of Mr. Vilas, Showing the Year's Operations of the Postoffice Department.

The Year's Postal Changes—More than 22,000 Changes of Postmasters During the Year.

The report of Postmaster General Vilas for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, says in immensity and extent of means, of expenditures, of performances and results, the postal machinery of the United States exceeds—in some points far exceeds—that of any other nation on the globe. The entire length of all railways employed by the United States largely equals the combined extent of those of all other countries of the world, while the other post routes more than quadruple the total of any single people besides; and the mileage last year of our mail transportation exceeded by more than 125,000,000 miles the service rendered to any other government. Of postoffices no other nation has one-third our number. It is estimated that 100,000,000 more letters were mailed in the United States last year than in Great Britain, and nearly that number more than were mailed in Germany, France, and Britain combined. The proposition to each inhabitant is estimated in the United States at 66, Great Britain 57, Germany 19.

At the close of the fiscal year the total number of postoffices was 53,644, besides 4,427 stamp offices, and these 57,71 were Presidential offices, divided as follows: First class, 76; second class, 149; third class, 1,759. In the fourth class there were 13,016. Adding all the other 2,295 were money-order offices, besides 92 money-order stations. Concerning appointments the report says:

The appointments of Postmasters during the last fiscal year numbered aloeption 40,000, of which 9,112 were made to fill vacancies occasioned by resignations or expired commissions, 587 to vacancies caused by death, 3,492 on the establishment of new offices, and 7,766 upon removals. Of the total number of appointments, 1,019 were made by yourself, the vacancies having occurred from the following causes, respectively—viz: By expiration of commission, 468; by resignations, 252; by deaths, 24; by removals or suspensions, 247; and to offices which had been assigned from the fourth to the third class, 47."

During the year the free-delivery service was extended to Aurora, Ill.; Duluth, Minn.; and Newport, Ky. The total number of carriers was 6,249, an increase of 483. The total cost of this branch of the service was $4,312,206, an increase of $426,554 over the previous year. The work done by the carriers is summed up as follows:

The number of pieces of mail matter, counting collections and deliveries, handled by the carriers during the year was 2,520,959, an increase over the previous year of 204,983,186, or 15 per cent., while the carriers increased but 11.06 per cent. in force.

The money-order system has been extended to 31 additional offices during the year, while 10 were discontinued.

During the year there were issued 7,940,000 domestic money orders, amounting to nearly $114,000,000; 5,950,428 postal notes, amounting to $11,116,000; and 420,123 international orders, aggregating $7,178,286.21; besides the transmission of foreign orders to a total amount of $4,000,000. The entire amount of business done was $1,214,506,38, less by $2,869,69 than the previous year.

The net establishing the special-delivery system limited its operations to 39 postoffices. During the full year of its issue—from the 1st of July, 1885, when it was received for special delivery at these offices, during the full year, the total amount of fees received from this source was $84,792, leaving a gross profit to the Government of $27,697. From the enlarged system, extending the privileges of the act to 53 postoffices and all cities and towns, the Postmaster General expects great results.

The total revenues of the department for the year were $45,918,412, and the excess of cost over revenue $8,324,117. Of the total appropriations for the year, amounting to $54,242,534, the entire outlay actually made and estimated to be made is but $46,629,100.61, leaving a balance to be eventually covered into the Treasury of $4,303,901.38.

Letter-sheet envelopes, the report says, have been long authorized, but no real attempt was made to introduce them until last October, when a contract was made with the owner of a patent, by which the Government was to furnish them without cost, and pays for only what it sells. So far the experiment appears to find popular favor, but the Postmaster General thinks longer experiment desirable before recommending the purchase of the patent and the manufacture by the Government.

The death letter office during the year handled 5,923,745 pieces of mail matter, of which number 186,444 were delivered unopened to the proper parties, and 305,373 foreign letters were returned to the country of origin. Of those opened about one-half were destroyed as undeliverable or valueless. Letters to the number of 12,138, containing money amounting to $17,578, besides 18,166 letters containing drafts, checks, or other instruments for the payment of money of the total face value of $1,121,184, were delivered to the owners. The revenue derived from dead letters was $13,000, and the cost of the office, aside from auction sale of unclaimed parcels, amounted to $8,872.27.

Postoffices were reported robbed to the number of 127, and 239 were burglarized; 95 postal cars were burned or wrecked, 27 mail stages and 7 mail messengers were robbed, 75 pouches were lost, and 197 reported stolen or missing, and 1,019 were robbed under the following facts:

For violation of postal laws during period were arrested, of whom 243 were in service and 417 were not; 110 were postmasters, assistants, or clerks, 127 mail-postal clerks, 24 letter-carriers, 17 mail-carriers, and 11 of various employments. Seventy-nine burglars and 31 former postmasters are included among the arrests outside of the service. The State courts took jurisdiction of 6 cases and the Federal courts of 626. Of the latter convictions followed in 214, acquittals in 36, trial waits in 226, and the residue were dismissed or failed of indictment.

Hon. Joseph E. McDonald on the "Benefits of the Democratic Administration."

At the annual banquet of the Iroquois Club of Chicago, given at the Palmer House, the guest-one of half-a-dozen, the national finance, and the proper method of dealing with the public lands were elucidated by Speaker Carlisle, Senator Beck, and Commissioner Sparks. Letters of regret were read from many prominent Democrats, the 8th being headed by President Cleveland, Governor Fitz Hugh Lee, Assistant Secretary Fitz John Porter.

The Renowned Kentuckian on the Tariff and the Evils Thereof.

Responding to the toast "American Industries" Speaker Carlisle said:

Although the toast just read assorts a self-evident truth, we cannot afford to ignore the importance in the true age of philosophical research and practical knowledge there are men in the Republic who deny the truth of the proposition. Nor are we at all surprised that the Government can make its estimate of the importance of the industrial class of the United States, and also of the extent of the evil, and also of the extent of the evil, and also of the extent of the evil

The letter sheet envelope recently adopted by the government has been declared a failure. The cause of this is that the perforated ends wear off in transmission through mail.

Having used the labor vote as a club to knock out the fusion state ticket the organs have no further use for the toilers, as is shown by the following in Saturday's Detroit Tribune: "Mr. Henry George made a very good run for mayor of New York, and he may have considerable credit for that circumstance if he will now padlock his mouth. As the matter stands now however, Mr. George is talking his good reputation to death." Michigan knights of labor, this "padlock you mouth." insult is a good thing to paste in your hats.—Pontiac Bill Poster.

Cleveland has no terrible war upon his hands, as Lincoln had. But he is at the head of a nation which has almost doubled in population since Lincoln was elected. He has succeeded to the administration as the representative of a party that had been out of power for twenty-four years. He was elected not because he was a democrat but because he was the only democrat who could be elected. In very truth he was nominated and elected because of the democratic enemies he had made. He took office with but slight acquaintance with national men and affairs. He surrounded himself with a cabinet including men recognized as leaders of his party. But it took less than a year to demonstrate that Cleveland was both the leader and wheel-horse of his own administration. Lincoln was no more the trusted and brain of his administration than Cleveland is the dominant will and intellect of his. Among the leading politicians of his own party he is almost without a sincere friend. They beset and belie him at every turn. He is more respected by republican leaders than by the so-called democratic leaders. But he has won his way with the people so surely that from one end of the country to the other recalcitrant politicians have not dared to formally oppose his administration. They pester him, but they have not the courage to break from him. Although they can fret weary lines in his face they have not been able to move him aside from his purpose to execute his office as a public trust. The sympathy of all earnest lovers of their country should go forth to the president in his struggle with the politicians of his own party!—Chicago News.

Official State Rottenness.

This magnificent state government, which has succeeded by a scratch in continuing its lease upon power for only two years more, is disclosed to us a pretty mess with a very unpleasant stench attached. The bribery developments at the state prison at Jackson are only the worst of continued abuses which are constantly being unearthed, but the existence of which are constantly evinced by the sixes much since the wind's direction. That, with its pauline ions management, almost daily escapes of prisoners, laxity in administration, and with its labor, briberies and defalcations, such an institution must continue under republican rule.

trol is a sad prestige for its maintenance in the future as it should be conducted.

The present warden and officials should be indicted for conspiracy in attempting to smother the dastardly developments until after election. It was the people's right that they should know how an institution belonging to them was being conducted by their servants. What would a business man do with an employe, who was cognizant of another employe's defalcations, and withheld the knowledge until the employer had obligated himself for a length of time to the criminal and placed himself in danger of further defalcations. The cases are analagous. These men, it is asserted, knew of the proceedings with which Dr. Palmer's name is connected, and kept quiet until the people in a deluded moment, extended the party's lease of of power, and the latter's ability to run riot in the other departments of of the government. The rottenness disclosed by the Dodge committee in the last legislature, as existing in the public instruction department, the double pay allowed in the state department in the administration of the past. All point to the fact that a change is necessary in these departments.

The good results following the removal of the national government officials are proven by turnalites and bad management that have been noted in the campaign just past, as having existed. The state can be benefited in the same way. The opportunity of last week has gone, but a watchful public should remember these developments and pass upon them a right=eous verdict when next the party responsible passes to judgment.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

For Cleveland.

The New York Herald comes out squarely for the renomination of President Cleveland in 1888, as follows:

If the democratic party cannot reelect Mr. Cleveland it cannot elect any man to the presidency in 1888. President Cleveland has, by his wise and conservative course, won the respect and confidence of the country, not merely for himself, but for the democratic party. His administration of the nation's affairs has allayed the suspicions and fears of democratic success which the republicans spread broadcast in 1884, and so successfully that thousands of republicans unwillingly voted for Mr. Blaine or Mr. St. John rather than "risk a democrat," as the saying went in those days. Democrats who desire the continued success of their party must see that they can get it only with Mr. Cleveland at the head. The reason is plain. Mr. Cleveland's democracy, honest, straight-forward, faithful to democratic principles, is the kind the people trust and want. Not merely the democratic rank and file, but masses of republicans are on his side. The bitterness with which the Blaine organs persecute him is the best proof of his strength with the people. If the democratic party should cast him aside, should revolt against his policy and administration of affairs, that would be precisely what the republicans want.

Fruits in Northern Michigan.

Prof. H. S. VanDeman, pomologist of the U. S. department of agriculture, writes the Prairie Farmer as follows:

It having been my privilege recently to visit that part of Michigan lying southwest of Mackinaw and known as the Grand Traverse region, I was greatly pleased with that fruit seen there. Apples do remarkably well, and all varieties are hardy there. In size, perhaps, a little below those of Illinois or Ohio, but in color, flavor, and keeping qualities they excel those of almost any part of America. At the New Orleans Exposition I saw them tried in this respect, and in a most satisfactory way. Pears were hanging on the trees in abundance, but that dread enemy, the blight, has made some inroads. Sheldon and Flemish Beauty seemed particularly nice. Clapp's Favorite was stripped with red almost like many apples. It seemeds strange to talk about peaches so far north, but I gathered a nice specimen of Hill's Chili, and other fine varieties, near Lake Michigan, two hundred miles north of Benton Harbor, and I have ever seen. The reason of such success is the tempering influence of the lake, which never freezes except for a few miles from shore in the severest weather, and the prevailing westwardly winds carry the heat arising from the lake across the adjacent land. This causes a heavy fall of snow, and it is a fact that the ground very rarely freezes deep quite a large area.

STRAWBERRIES AND GRAPES.

Potatoes will keep over winter in the hill are sometimes dug in the spring. Volunteer potatoes are found in stubble fields, or wherever they have been started. This condition makes strawberry culture a grand success, as there is no winter killing of the plants, and the growth during the summer and fall is really good. Small fruits of all kinds do well. It is rather too cool for corn, and only the earlier kinds will usually ripen. The tender varieties, such as Rogers' seedlings and Brighton are always hardy, where the vines are merely thrown on the ground in fall. I saw lovely Delaware, Agawam and Salem hanging on the vines Oct. 24, and the season of ripening had just begun. Such clear complexion! I have never seen elsewhere on fruits. In this particular they seem almost to rival that of the faces of the charming girls that are seen on every hand. Indeed, their apples and pears have no blotches of fungus, so common in the south and West.

PLUMS

But what delighted me more than all else, was the abundance of plums of the very largest size and finest quality. The trees were breaking under loads of Golden Drop, Green Gage and Lombard. I am confident that I saw baskets of Pond's Seedling that would average in size with small hen's eggs.

Western Wheat.

PEORIA, Tuesday, Nov. 22.—The wheat crop of the Red River valley proves to be larger than the estimates. The elevators and warehouses along the line of the Manitoba road are all full to overflowing, and in some of the towns the farmers pile the sacks out of doors as the railroad is unable to furnish cars fast enough to haul it to market. The Manitoba road has 4,000 cars, but many of them are tied up at Duluth owing to the lack of facilities there to handle the grain. The railroads say the movement of grain from the Red River valley is unprecedented.

AYER'S Sugar-Coated Cathartic PILLS.

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Hampton, Wm. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else to regulate my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with great benefit for cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia. —G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills ever compounded, and use no other.—Morris Gates, Dowsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and discussing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the humor in my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured. —Jesse D. Wade, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them some doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call on a physician if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, and all pain went away, and health was restored. —Theodore Eisling, Richmond, Va.

THE WORLD.

BY PESTIDAH.

Who contemplates this world of ours,
And thinks of all its wondrous changes,
Its pulses and its latent power,
Find through all nature's vast ranges,

The broadening plain, the rushing river,
The valley and the mountain top,
All things but soon or never,
The natural forces never stop.

The ocean wide, the mountain lake,
The awe-inspiring summer storm
The varying changes that they make
As they hold wondrous parts perform.

As in a pure virgin bore,
The spirit of every wind that blows;
The changes in each coming year
Are man's hereditary foes.

The mind that set this world in motion
And gave to every force its move,
That set the boundaries to the ocean,
In Infinite Spirit's great first cause.'

I view the sky so bright and clear,
I see the beauties of the sea;
The great first cause that I revere,
The king of heaven and earth, our God."

A REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

Among the many gallant officers whom the state of New York gave to the Union army was Captain John F. Foster of the Fourteenth Regiment New York volunteers Guards. It was not my good fortune to meet him until April, 1864, although we were both serving in the Department of the Gulf, and on the same day, June 14, 1863, each of us had an experience before the Confederate citadel of Port Hudson, the memory of which will be life-long. Mine related to the sanguinary and unsuccessful assault, and the columns of Grover and Weitzel were hurled against those impregnable fortifications, his to a captivity there, begun, which, with his subsequent experience in Richmond, and his during and wonderful escape, will make a story in which the whole unpublished records of individual heroism in the great struggle for life will be challenged to excel. He bears the remarkable distinction of having been the first Union officer who escaped from Libby Prison, and the only one who ever went to liberate us during, and, well knowing that the narrative would always remain unpublished if he were depended upon to write it, his old friend and comrade prays him to take no offense if he essays the task, putting the narrative in the first person, as its intense interest seems to demand:

Early on the morning of June 14 I was sent out with my company up the Jackson road, to watch for the appearance of the enemy's cavalry, it being expected that they would take advantage of our assault on the works to make a dash at our lines. About two miles up the road we were suddenly surrounded and taken prisoners by a battalion of gray-coats who dashed out of the woods on both sides of the road. I regret that the limits which are prescribed for this account will not permit me to relate the hundred interesting incidents of that day, when I was held a captive, with my company, almost in sight of the Union attacking columns, and listened to the clamor of the assault, nor the incidents of the fifteen weeks, in we were slowly transported to Richmond in close and filthy cattle-cars. I find it necessary to save space by beginning at once, with my confinement in the Libby; first mentioning that before we were searched there in the woods, near Port Hudson, I was fortunate enough to be able to secrete beneath the buttons of my coat three double eagles that were in my pocket. To these three gold pieces, and the forethought that suggested their concealment, I was frequently indebted, in a great measure, for my escape.

At the time when the doors of the old tobacco warehouse closed upon me, about two hundred Union officers were inside it, of every grade, from Brigadier down. They had been captured in every part of the military situation, represented every loyal State, and all arms of the service, and had collectively fought in the greatest battles of the war, up to that time. Those of the number who are best known to fame were General Neal Dow, Colonel Strong, and Lieutenant Colonel Irvine. We were confined in large rooms up-stairs, with guards in the halls, guards outside, and a regular visit and roll-call twice a day by the commandant. What I saw and heard in that place would fill a book. That I suffered, I need not say; bad food, and little of it; foul air, filth, vermin, and the dreary, irksome conscript, need hardly be named in proof of that. Yet our captivity was somewhat lightened by the friendships that grew up within those dreary walls. Those of us who were confined in the same room could talk together, although subject to constant watch. Some of us worked very cautiously for a long time to remove several bricks from the partition-wall between us and the next room, when we could stealthily converse with its occupants. In this way I discovered some old friends, and cheered myself and them by giving and receiving information from home.

During the first few months of my imprisonment, there was very little whisper among us on the subject of escape. The season progressed, and when General Meade withdrew from Mine Run, we understood that there was to be an investment of Richmond that winter. Then our hopes and our talk turned to that willow-the-vine, "exchange." Ah, how many poor hearts grew sick and weary, how many brave men have died, waiting for that hope deferred! Time passed; there was no exchange; we realized that we must not put great faith in the ability of our Government to liberate us. After this, over our miserable rations, or in the darkness of winter nights, as we lay shivering on the cold floor, we commenced discussing spirits with what fort trade we could command, we began to consult together about the chances of escape, and to watch narrowly by day for some way to accomplish it. Our wits were sharpened by hunger and suffering, and still more by that yearning for liberty that is all in all to the poor prisoner, and every plan that offered the faintest gleam of hope was examined and discussed, before one was finally adopted.

One of the incidents of our imprisonment, which occurred before our plan of escape was matured, I can never recall without a quickened pulse. All the Captains among the prisoners were one day ordered into a room together—some fifty of us. There we were met by Major Turner, the commandant, who produced a clearbox containing paper slips, each bearing the name of one of us. He informed us that one of us was to be selected by lot for immediate execution, in retaliation for the hanging of two Confederate Captains as alleged spies, by General Burnside. What our emotions were upon this announcement, I shall not attempt to describe; what could be done to save our comrade, I pondered the hundred interesting incidents of that day, when I was held a captive, with my company, almost in sight of the Union attacking columns, and listened to the clamor of the assault, nor the incidents of the fifteen weeks, in we were slowly transported to Richmond in close and filthy cattle-cars. I find it necessary to save space by beginning, at once, with my confinement in the Libby; first mentioning that before we were searched there in the woods, near Port Hudson, I was fortunate enough to be able to secrete beneath the buttons of my coat three double eagles that were in my pocket. To these three gold pieces, and the forethought that suggested their concealment, I was frequently indebted, in a great measure, for my escape.

At the time when the doors of the old tobacco warehouse closed upon me, almost two hundred Union officers were inside it, of every grade, from Brigadier down. They had been captured in every part of the military situation, represented every loyal State, and all arms of the service, and had collectively fought in the greatest battles of the war, up to that time. Those of the number who are best known to fame were General Neal Dow, Colonel Strong, and Lieutenant Colonel Irvine. We were confined in large rooms up-stairs, with guards in the halls, guards outside, and a regular visit and roll-call twice a day by the commandant. What I saw and heard in that place would fill a book. That I suffered, I need not say; bad food, and little of it; foul air, filth, vermin, and the dreary, irksome conscript, need hardly be named in proof of that. Yet our captivity was somewhat lightened by the friendships that grew up within those dreary walls. Those of us who were confined in the same room could talk together, although subject to constant watch. Some of us worked very cautiously for a long time to remove several bricks from the partition-wall between us and the next room, when we could stealthily converse with its occupants. In this way I discovered some old friends, and cheered myself and them by giving and receiving information from home.

During the first few months of my imprisonment, there was very little whisper among us on the subject of escape. The season progressed; and when General Meade withdrew from Mine Run, we understood that there was to be an investment of Richmond that winter. Then our hopes and our talk turned to that willow-the-vine, "exchange." Ah, how many poor hearts grew sick and weary, how many brave men have died, waiting for that hope deferred! Time passed; there was no exchange; we realized that we must not put great faith in the ability of our Government to liberate us. SCIENTIFIC TRUTH

Regarding the Functions of an Important Organ,

Of Which the Public Knows but Little, Worthy Careful Consideration.

To the Editor of the Scientific American:

Will you permit me to make known to the public the facts we have learned during the past year, relative to the functions of the liver, as we have discovered it to be organic which diseased it always in sympathy with it, and, as a consequence, we have discovered and are suppressing, if not, a medical Journal of Truth" standing would admit these facts, for very obvious reasons.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

That we may emphasize and clearly explain the relation the kidneys sustain to the general health, and how much it depends upon them, we propose, metaphorically speaking, to take you from the human body, place in it a water-bowl before us, and examine it for the purpose of illustration.

You will imagine that we have before us a body shaped like a human being, with all its organs, should four inches in length, two in width, and one in thickness. It represents a man, or woman, as the case may be, for it matters not, save that the organs are slightly larger in the female. A small opening in the side, represents the mouth, and the organs size man contains about ten quarts of blood, which circulates, into, through and out of filters or sewers, as they may be called, among just a drop at a time. Now, if this drop, or any other drop, should become poisonous in these minutes, it would be carried back to the heart, and from there to the kidneys, to be purified, night and day, sleeping or waking, forever, without ceasing, and if it could not do so, it would soon cease to be a source of life to man. Now, we will take a glass of water, and pour into the water bowl, which represents the human body, which is constantly going on, a water filter kind of site and surrounding a hundred fold. Just as soon as he said it I and Dean Penny rose right in the well and said, "Jonathan Jones and the members of the choir through the reversed parliament and set him on. I tell you no man can stand it for more than a few months." Pasteur's ideas was anticipated by 165 years.

MR. J. HOWARD JAMES, manager Stockert's Livery, 619 N. 5th street, Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have tried all other remedies without relief, for a heavy cold on the chest, accompanied by a severe cough, I used Red Star Cough Cure, and in a very short time was entirely well.

A YOUNG man who suffered pretty regularly three times a week with severe attacks of neuralgic headache, was relieved by discontinuing meats, or adopting a purely vegetable diet. Meats when not thoroughly digested as they are apt not to be in case of torpid stomach and liver, develop poisonous compounds which favor rheumatic and neuralgic affections. —Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

How Patti and Nilsson Once "Rassalled."

The Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Times tells of a dinner party in that city in 1868, where Patti and Nilsson met, relating the following extraordinary occurrence:

Coffee was served in the salon, and Ambroise Thomas tried to induce both Nilsson and Patti to sing something, but neither would consent to do so, although the eminent composer volunteered to play his accompaniments.

"I have eaten too much to be able to sing," said Patti; and then she added: "Just! I am ready to wrestle with Nilsson at this moment."

"Rassal! qu'est ce que c'est que ca?" asked Santi Armand, who knows no language but French, and who had not well as he ought to.

Explanation followed, and then took place a laughable, not to say somewhat naughty, trial of strength between the two rival divas. Mlle. Patti made quite a plucky struggle, but in the end Nilsson was forced to carry on her back, amid loud applause led by the illustrious composer of "Faust." Then some one suggested that Gounod and Thomas should wrestle, but they declined, and the athletic entertainment was wound up by the Prince going to the piano, and singing "Ronsard et son roi" from "Philemon et Baucis" to his own accompaniment.—Texas Siftings.

ON BOARD A YACHT.

The Sailors Have an Easy Time, But Do Not Like the Life.

Housekeeping on board a yacht we find to be quite an interesting study. Champagne is one of the cardinal principles. Many of us do not drink it, fearing headache, but it is always "there," and we believe no yacht is considered properly ballasted without champagne. Various yacht owners have various superstitions, however, and it is said that the owner of the Mayflower never sails unless the white sloop is fully stocked with melons. Small wonder, however, that the owners of racing yachts need some creature comfort on board, for on race days every bit of coal is put on shore to "lighten the ship" and collations are the order of the day. In some yachts even the cabin furniture is taken out during a race and every bit of superfluous weight is removed—boats, davits, the heaviest anchor, etc. No idlers are allowed on board either. If a guest is invited on a racing yacht in one of these close and exciting contests it is with the understanding that he is to help the crew, in order to make up for his weight. In other words, the crew is a Corinthian one, everybody is at least expected to "haul in on the main sheet."

Yacht sailors have a pretty easy, comfortable time of it, as may be imagined, and yet many of them do not like the life. They long for the perils and excitements of the deep sea sailing, when they have once become used to it, and beg to be allowed to return to the ocean. Indeed the destination of a yacht is largely "turbonist," and what with contrary winds and equally perverse calms, with the constantly recurring necessity of shipping 'more water,' and a new supply of ice, the ocean wave gets a good deal neglected. The stowing of the ice is accomplished in a highly co-operative manner—six people and one good rope and tackle all assisting at the ceremony. The last man has the hardest time of it, for he really has to carry the ice, and on his shoulder at that. Clad in an oilskin garment, the patient Ludwig stands in the hold, receives the big lumps of ice, and directions from below and above, and staggering a little under the heavy load, drops it into the big refrigerator. It all looks so simple, and is done so systematically, that it is quite impressive. We mentally resolve to erect forthwith ropes and tackles in our own house, and to organize the cook and the waiters, and our "chig boy" into an amateur crew, to be drilled into the use of this tackle which accomplishes such wonders on board ship, and then if strikes us that the iceman on land, in a laudatory way, and with the help of a pair of stairs, accomplished the ice job unassisted, save by tongs! But the rope and tackle are mighty on board ship, and one of their most envious feats is when a sailor stands on a gaff and hoists himself and the sail simultaneously, assisted by his mates, who haul him below till he has reached a sufficient height, when he slides down the mast—with his boots on!

How much pleasanter it would be if a ship could sail always on one tack! No sooner are we comfortably established with deck-chair and cushions, a protecting "washout" against the sun, and the sad story of the cruise of the Jeanette, as a protection against ennui, than the eternal order comes, "Ready-o!" the sailors echo it and fly to change all the sails, jibs, and gibbets, and we must shift, too, or sit in the hot sunlight! But the boat leans over on her lap, with its tale of heroic endurance and brave endeavor, as gently as wickedness of grumbling at little matters. Also it suggests well the fully and nobly-minded, if overcarefully watching and guarding a boy. Four De Long, the child whose fond mother would not permit him to join in any rough or boyish sports lest he should come to harm, what a terrible fate was his! The boy for whom swimming and shooting were too dangerous goes to the north pole and perishes of Arctic cold and hunger! What a mockery of fate, what celestial fatalism is here!—Boston Transcript.

A peril in one of our public schools remarked one day last week, while noticing history, that "the first convention Congress met in Philadelphia." It has been suggested that it was also the last one.—Saps Ann Breeze.

New Dances.

The Professors, after having considered a score of round dances that had been submitted to them, decided upon adopting only four of them. Two of the favored ones are round and two square dances.

The round dances are said to be perfectly intoxicating in their loveliness, and the man who cannot dance them should make up his mind that he was intended for a hitching-post, not a waltzer.

The first was evolved from the lively brain of Prof. James Brooks of Pittsburg, Pa. It is called the American gyrot, and is set to polka music. It combines the best features of the polka with those of the polka redowa. Its effect is so powerful that the orchestra musicians sometimes throw down their fiddles and rush upon the floor to join the maddening whirl.

The other round dance is patriotically christened the Columbia, and the girls prefer it to lecerean with sodawater trimmings. It was carved out of the brain of Prof. S. D. Spink of Providence, R. I., and it is expected to become the favorite dance this season. The Columbia is entirely new and is a combination of trois temps and the waltz to schottische music. Men with wooden legs are especially advised not to attempt this innovation.

One of the square dances is called the Octagon, and it is as complicated as the account book of a young lady who has been on a shopping expedition. It is a double quadrille, with figures and music entirely new. Prof. H. C. Rivers of Brooklyn was the ingenious architect of the Octagon, and if he were to run for Mayor of Brooklyn the girls would cast a solid vote for him.

The court quadrille also passed muster and met the approbation of the Professors. Prof. Spink of Providence lay awake nights thinking over it, and its effect is as entrancing as a gallon of opium.

It is danced by eight couples and has lots of crazy-quilt movements, while the music is particularly fine. Everything in it is new and the dancers are expected to wear new swallow-tail suits and ballroom dresses. It promises to be as exciting as the cholera, and a thousand times more popular.—New York Journal.

In Washington Territory there are at present only eighteen counties, and about all of these were taken from Oregon when it was made a state. The soil is good enough in the best of them to produce forty bushels of wheat to the acre, fifty to eighty of oats, twenty to forty of barley, and plenty of cereals and vegetables, pasture lands, etc. There are fine forests of timber, cedar and firs chiefly, coal beds, iron and iron mills, regions for the dairy, prairie and swamp lands, fisheries, canneries (nine in the territory), lime kilns of great value and production. Cargoes of wheat are sent to Europe.

What Time Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Isaiah's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, in it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. cow1

A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, Selby, Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and New York, had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only "saved him from premature death" but relieved the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were also affected and a single dose had the same happy effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the standard remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner. Free trial bottles of this standard remedy at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

"And in '61, Tom."

"And in '61, Tom, then it was all us women folks gathered together in an old vacant store down on Main street, to fix up clothes and lint and bandages. Kiss and I were making a suit for you, and we went down with the others to finish it and do what we could to make up things for the rest.

"Lordsakes, I'll never forget the turn it gave me, when old Mrs. Thompson, sitting on a coat for awhile, laid it down on her knee and, looking around at the rest of us, said: 'I do declare, I feel just like we was making the grave clothes for them boys.' Well, you should have seen those women folks! They flocked up around her and scolded her, and asked how she dared talk that way, and she cried, and said she had two boys in the army, and she wanted the Yankees to be whipped just as much as anybody, but she couldn't help her feelings. I tell you, Tom, it made me feel awful queer and Ellen she turned right white in the face. I hope I'll never get such another fright. And Mrs. Cole looked at her son with a far away expression in her eyes.

"Strange how things do turn out," she continued. "There was Jim Toner, who was so awful fierce in them first days, saying what he could do and what he would do when he met the Yankees, and laughing at little Eddie Tatum because he wouldn't be anxious to have the Yankees shooting at him; if he could help it, Jim Toner, he allowed that he could take his shotgun any morning and whip a dozen of the best Yankees that ever crossed Mason and Dixon's line. Now, they do say when Jim went to war, and when his company got to where the fighting was, he dropped his gun and ran like a mountain cat, and that was the last ever seen of him till he showed up here last fall. And there was little Eddie Tatum and Bud Tatum, too, in that same company, and they never run an inch; and Bud told us when he came home afterwards with only one arm, that little Eddie fell by his side, with three bullets in him, and even then he wanted to get up and fight some more, and when Bud kneeled by him, and lifted his head up, he looked up in his face and smiled, and said: 'Bo good to me, Bud, and tell mother I cry; and tell her how I got the new clothes she sent yesterday, and how nice they were; and tell her, Bud, that every one of the Yankees big boys that Yankees made in my new coat was in the front; Bud; and now, Bud, leave me—they want you over there. Good-bye, Bud, good-bye.' And Bud kissed him and put his arms down by his side and his gun by his side, and went into the fight again—and here old Mrs. Cole paused to wipe her eyes, while Tom swallowed heavily once or twice, and two bright drops rolled down little Ellie's cheeks the prettiest, where they sparkled like diamonds.

"And Bud went into the fight, and when he came out, he had lost his other arm to his brother, there he sat where he dropped him against an over-turned cannon. His gun was on his knees, and to the edge of his coat he had pinned a piece of paper—a leaf from the little Bible which lay open by his side, its leaves fluttering in the breeze—and he'd written his name on that leaf and a little message to his mother, and told who he was, and asked that he might be brought home sometime to be buried. And poor Bud, he fell down across his feet, as he sat there, dead, with a smile on his fair young face."—The Life, Little Rock, Ark.

THE TALE OF A TAB.

Which Shows That Young Men Should Read the Labels on Their Coats.

Several weeks ago, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, a gentleman, known in this transaction as Eugene Reading, bought a dark gray Norfolk summer coat while making a flying trip to Boston. On the inside of the collar of the coat was fastened the manufacturer's tab bearing the insignificant characters: "Lot 27,753, R. 38." When Reading tore the tag off his eye caught some writing on the side which had been next to the coat. He read: "Melissa Polley, West Bowdoin, Maine." He put the tab into his pocket, transacted his business, and a couple of weeks after his return to Pittsburg decided to make a test of this gentle hint to mankind in general. He wrote a letter to Miss Polley, in which he told her that he had discovered her name upon the tab and congratulated her upon her excellent workmanship, saying that one who could sew so neatly must, indeed, be a young lady of other commendable and lovable qualities. He emphasized his sincerity by calling her a "pretty tailoress," and professed the strange awakening within his heart of something akin to gratitude for the kind and skillful hand which had made the garment.

The letter carried safely, and in due time came the following frank, yet modest reply:

West Bowdoin, Me., Aug. 15, 1886. Dear friend: I received your letter of congratulation. I thought I would thank you for it; I hope you will not think me too free. I should like to know what kind of a coat it was. If it is a Norfolk, as to the "pretty tailoress," there is no such word in the book; but I do not know what the man sent would do if it should come in contact with a dictionary. I will close with many thanks and lots of good wishes. Yours truly,

MELISSA S. POLLEY.

P. S.—You say you purchased your coat over 3 years ago. Have you been thinking of me all this time? Excuse me for being so saucy, but I hope you have got it yet. MELISSA.

Mr. Reading had evidently "got it settled," and, if any doubt had remained in his mind, the gentle hint in the postscript had wiped it away, for the return mail carried a letter full of burning words and such other nonsense as a lover, or one ambitious for that position, is apt to use. A correspondence followed, and letters passed each other, going and coming, between them, at an average of twice and then three times a week.

The conclusion finally reached by the young Pittsburger, who had received ample encouragement in his suit, was that life would be burdensome without this "pretty tailoress," for she has proven to be such from the picture which he got one day recently; and after all, the term "old maid," which she had applied to herself, was a ruse to test the interest of her Pittsburg admirer. She has his picture, and from the association she wrote upon it has certainly concluded that her handsome captured lover is a man of handsome face and kindly features, for she writes "if you are just half as good as you look, I am proud of your professed admiration and interest in me."

That sentence is what clinched the matter as far as Reading was concerned. He immediately wrote a proposal for marriage, and asked that her acceptance or refusal be sent by telegram. He received the following:

Engage Rooms; Yes, with pleasure.

MELISSA.

The overjoyed lover almost hugged the district boy who delivered the message to him, and, after reading it over and over, wrote the following with trembling hand:

Good, I am coming as soon as I can get a leave of absence.

And just now there is a clerk about the City Hall who is feeling under no restraint, and every day he prays his chief of department for a vacation of two weeks to go to Maine.

Housekeeping.

An overworked woman may keep her house in order, but she adds little to the comfort of her home. Good housekeeping is by no means so rare as good homekeeping. It is of far less importance. A certain amount of drudgery must be gone through with daily in any calling; about three-fourths of life is drudgery. One-fourth can be rescued from the toil and moil of the world for management and thought. The most difficult and the most necessary lesson for a housekeeper to learn is how to do less and yet be industrious. It is useless to try to please everybody. Many things in our homes are done with "an eye single" to our neighbors. Work must be pruned down and lopped off until it matches our strength, for the latter refuses to be enlarged by any amount of thought. It is also pointless to adjust the balance properly. It requires much giving up

EASTERN.

It is asserted by the New York Herald that two great combinations have been formed to control the soft-coal output of the country and advance prices sixty cents per ton before the year ends.

Fifty-seven head of fancy stock were burned to death in the barns of J. W. Alden at East Syracuse, N. Y. Farming implements and a large amount of grain and hay were also destroyed. The total loss is $40,000.

"Doc" Wilson now declares himself a son of the bath-style millionaire Mason, which fact the latter concealed until 1879, when he experienced religion and made the confession. Since then "Doc" has received some money from Mason, but the Wilson family got more for keeping silence. Wilson's story was told in the presence of four reputable citizens of Providence, R. I.

His story, says a Providence dispatch, is that he is the son of Mason's first wife, and that he was born a few months after the marriage. Mason, being a deacon and a prominently religious Christian, did not wish to face the scandal of a divorce, so he left his first wife, married a virgin named Sarah Jane Wilson, of Dansville, Ill., and lived with her for a time. The babe was transferred to the father's care and brought up as a Wilson. The boy lived and toiled in the humble station to which his lady mother consigned him, and it was not until he was married himself and had a child that he learned his mother's shame at his birth. For that secret he was indebted to religious scruples of his original father, Jonas Wilson, who, being on his death-bed, and not expecting to live to meet with a burden on his soul, drew the boy's mother to his bed-side and told her he was. After Wilson had lived with his wife for November to meet his father face to face. There first meeting, Wilson says, was cordial, and he was treated like a son by the old Mason that morning, and after observing the signs of a will made in his favor, he thought he deserved it. Mason, however, in penance for the wrong done one who should be the heir to his estate, at first refused to acknowledge the lad, and would bequeath his property to charity. Wilson fashioned a sufficiently potent argument, by threatening him for the wrong done his mother, and he said: "I will force you to acknowledge me, and the world shall know you for what you are." Mason, to shut the boy's story, the Wilsons, who have the secret for his percentage, seeing "Doc" had money and was willing to spend it, began to bring their claims upon him. Their demands increased, and to satisfy them he had to apply to Mason for money, and in that way much of the sum received from the banker was paid to the family. The blow demands upon him at last so exorbitant that he became almost impoverished by the drain.

WESTERN.

A fire in the three-story brick building Nos. 200 and 202 Madison street, Chicago, occupied by R. Rothschild's Sons & Co., manufacturers of saloon, bank, and office fixtures, did damage to the amount of about $80,000.

A collision of trains near Greenwood, Mo., caused the death of Col. Elijah A. Magoffin, postal clerk, nephew of the ex-Governor of Kentucky.

The President of the Marquette, Ontonagon and Portage Road is credited with saving the lives of twenty-four men shipwrecked off Marquette in a recent storm. He ordered the railway track cleared of trains, and appealed to the life-saving crew at Portage City to travel 110 miles, with a special engine and car, at the greatest speed i possible.

An unknown nobleman, while passing Ludington, Mich., had his flag at half-mast, and the Grand Rapids Belle life-saving crew put out to render assistance. The boat, however, capsized and Captain Flynn, Orin Batch, and John Smith lost their lives.

The Hendricks Monument Committee at Indianapolis has $10,000 on deposit, and has reason to expect $20,000 more from promises made.

Amos Stout, an influential citizen of Martinsville, Ind., came to his death in a singular manner. He was seized with cramps, and morphine was administered to relieve his pain. Shortly after taking the drug he was paralyzed in the throat, and in attempting to swallow, swallowed his tongue. He died a few hours afterward.

Mackenbroff's large store at Mason, Mich., was destroyed by fire, J. J. Hoagland, Malcolm Miller, and a son of the proprietor perishing in the flames. Mackenbroff, in escaping by jumping from a window, broke a leg.

Shipley, Doney & Co., wholesale dry goods dealers at Cincinnati, have made an assignment. The liabilities are placed at $[illegible]0,000.

The Chicago Ledger, in its announcement for 1887, promises a series of articles from the pen of Dr. H. W. Thomas, pastor of the People's Church, of Chicago. Dr. Thomas is one of the most vigorous and original writers of the day, and the Ledger is to be congratulated upon securing his services.

District Assembly No. 47 of Cleveland, Ohio, has resolved to deplore in great loss of lives on the lakes, claiming that the disasters are mainly caused by overloading the vessels and the inadequate number of the crews, and urging Congressman Foran to do his utmost to get the bill passed that he introduced last winter to regulate lake and marine shipping, and stop this wholesale murder.

SOUTHERN.

Robt. Vance, of San Antonio, Texas, was thirty years ago one of the executors on the week. So great was the interest in the case that the officials had to barricade the corridors in order to prevent a dangerous jam.

In West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, the home of John Wilkerson was invaded by masqueraders murdering Major John McKay and a female cook. They next fired the premises, still both bodies were consumed. An attempt to assassinate Wilkerson failed.

POLITICAL.

[illegible] Pennsylvania Legislature from eight counties have passed resolutions indorsing Matthew S. Quay for the United States Senate, to succeed Mitchell.

An Indianapolis dispatch states that Green Smith, President pro tem. of the Indiana State Senate, and bolder-over Senator from Jennings County, has filed in the office of the Clerk of the Marion Circuit Court a petition for an injunction to restrain the Secretary of State from transmitting papers to Speaker of the House of Representatives the result of the vote cast for Lieutenant Governor at the recent election in a State. Senator Smith is a Democrat and the temporary presiding officer of the Senate, of which body he will become the actual presiding officer in the event of his contest succeeding, as Lieutenant Governor was unnecessary to fill the vacancy caused by Gen. Manson accepting a Federal position. Robertson, Republican, was elected Lieutenant Governor at the recent election. The suit is brought at the instance of important bearing in the coming Senatorial contest.

The Mormons are preparing to move in a body from Utah Territory to Mexico. The action is taken because of a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Utah, which holds that the Territorial Legislature is not a legal body, because of the wholesale polygamous character of its members, and that the laws passed by it are consequently of no force. The Mormons claim that they have lived up to the laws of the Territory, and that they should not be disfranchised because a few of their number have violated the laws of the United States. They say that they will be driven from their homes in Utah, and they propose to anticipate the action of the Supreme Court by leaving the Territory in a body. They have already purchased a tract of land in Mexico, and will begin the work of colonization at once.

How the Condemned Men Received the News.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The anarchists were all pleased with the news, and if they eventually escape all punishment it is safe to say they won't again play with edged tools. When seen by a reporter Parsons was seated in his cell. He had his feet against the grated door and his chair tilted back at an angle of forty-five degrees. Asked what he thought of the decision of the Supreme Court, he said it struck him very favorably, and he was glad to hear it. He didn't know to what extent the influence brought to bear in the trial of the Chicago anarchists influenced the decisions of Supreme Court Justices on a motion for a supersedeas, but he was pleased to see that they had cut no figure. He thought the decisions of Judge Scott in granting the writ was in itself an evidence that the contest was in his favor, and the others was a violation of the law.

"If you expect and pray for escape do you think you will talk and walk free in the future as you did in the past?" he was asked.

"I can't tell whether I will do the same things and preach the same doctrines. For my part, I am willing to agree to the societies, orders, and conferences to which the working classes have been invited, and sometimes get the better of a man who feels for his wife and leads him to say that he wouldn't say when in his calmer moments. It's a great deal better for the working classes, the leader of one party abuses the leader of the other, but after the meeting they are over everything settles down to quiet again."

Fielden was not much excited by the news, as he was just about what he expected. He was unexpiring what business he would engage in if he finally got clear of his present troubles, and was unable to say whether he would be able to get back to his upon him to change the opinions he had so freely uttered in the past.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

B. T. Frederick, representing the Fifth Iowa District in Congress, has resigned his seat because Postmaster General Vilas appointed a postmaster in his bailiwick at the request of Congressman Murphy.

Official notice has been filed that Congressman Sam Mr. Scott bought 15,000 tons of steel rails from a Pennsylvania rolling mill, paying $35.50 per ton. The price is pronounced satisfactory to the seller. There was then no combination of the steel rails of the country. Six months later a combination was effected, and now the price of steel rails is $43 per ton. The advance in the cost of production does not exceed $2.50 per ton, leaving an advance in steel rails of $5 per ton without produce 1,500,000 tons of steel rails a year, so that the additional profit of $5 p r ton amounts to $7,500,000, to be annually divided between the seven or eight mills. The railroads, said Mr. Scott, do not pay the excessive profit. They simply advance the money, and it is you who travel over the railroads, and who transport your merchandise and produce over them, who in the end pay this excessive profit to the manufacturers. It comes at just upon the people."

The duty on steel rails is $17 a ton. The price paid in England, when Mr. Scott bought his rails, was about $17.50. With the duty, freight, and the cost of handling, the cost of foreign rails in the United States would be about $35 a ton, while the cost of the United States, by combining, can make the price up to $43. The duty alone made this result—alone made it possible for the manufacturers to plunder the people.

In 1880, Mr. Moore points out, the total capital invested in iron production in this country was $20,975,995. The total product was $4,976,262. The total value of product, $55,809,410. The steel rail product of 1880 was 87,468,[illegible] tons, the wages in round numbers, $3,700,000, or about 50 per ton. Wages are now more than in 1880, and the wages paid for the production of 1,500,000 tons of steel rails will not exceed $7,500,000. This is the amount of the extra profit which the combination enabled the steel manufacturers to make—that is, the combination reimbursed themselves for the sums paid for the wages of producing the 1,500,000 tons of rails.

Mr. Moore is perfectly convinced that a duty of $10 per ton would be more than ample, and would give our manufacturers of rails, but even keep foreign rails out. But it would give consumers steel rails $6 or $7 a ton cheaper. A $10 duty could not possibly reduce wages, but it would materially reduce the enormous profits of the manufacturers.

Mr. Moore places in parallel columns a statement of the cost of rails, on the one theory of the greatest purchasing power of the people, and on the other the price put upon them by the combination. The result is a loss of condemnation in the shape of a tax

The Chief Justice of the Illinois Supreme Court Orders a Supersedeas.

The Executions Cannot Take Place Before March—How the Anarchists Received the News.

[Bloomington (Ill.) Special.]

Chief Justice Scott, of the Supreme Court, granted a supersedeas in the anarchists' case on Thursday. He reached his room in the court house from his residence between 8 and 9 o'clock. An hour later he sent for Captain Black, Mr. Solomon, and Mr. Swett and announced to them his decision. He then wrote out the following order and appended to it his signature:

After inspecting the foregoing transcript of the record, the undersigned, one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the State, is of opinion that there is a reasonable ground for granting the writ of error prayed for. It is therefore ordered that such a writ of error be granted in this cause, and that upon the filing of a bond in the sum of $[illegible] to be approved by a supersedeas as to such of the plaintiffs in error as are in custody, namely, Michael Schwab, Samuel Fielden, Albert R. Parsons, Adolph Fischer, and George Engel, that the sheriff of Cook County shall have the effect as provided in section [illegible] page 414, to stay the execution of the judgment against the said plaintiffs in error in said County, upon the said writ of error being issued and the further order that the Clerk of the Supreme Court in the City of Ottawa, Illinois, shall issue a writ of error in the usual form, upon the filing of a bond in the penal sum of $[illegible] conditioned as the statute directs.

Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

The writ of supersedeas which was issued was in form as follows:

I do hereby certify that a writ of error has issued from this office for the reversal of a judgment obtained by the people of the State of Illinois against Michael Schwab, Samuel Fielden, Albert R. Parsons, Adolph Fischer, and George Engel, plaintiffs in error, in the Criminal Court of Cook County, at the November term, A. D. 1886, and that the said plaintiffs in error have filed in this office a bond in the sum of $[illegible] with sureties, conditioned as the statute directs, and that the said plaintiffs in error are in the custody of the sheriff of said County.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Supreme Court of Ottawa, Illinois, this [illegible] day of Nov., A. D. 1886.

Clerk of the Supreme Court.

The convicted anarchists will not be hanged on the 13 proximo, if the decision of the Supreme bench, has granted a writ of supersedeas, which operates as a stay of execution pending the hearing of the appeal by the full bench. This hearing will take place at the spring term of the court, to be held at Ottawa, and the final decision will hardly be rendered before April or May. The granting of the supersedeas was aimed at a decision of the Illinois Supreme Court, by which the company hoped to secure a reversal of the order, on the ground that a delay of execution is necessary to allow the court time for hearing a case over 20,000 [illegible]

THE CURRENCY.

Report of Comptroller Trenholm—Important Changes suggested—Interesting Statistics.

The annual report of the Hon. William L. Trenholm, Comptroller of the Currency, contains suggestions for the amendment of the national bank laws in about a dozen instances, including the contingent liability of shareholders, requirements as to reserve, the limit of loans to individuals, more thorough examination of banks, and their protection against unequal State taxation. The specific character of these suggestions is withheld for the present. Three thousand five hundred and eighty national banks have been organized in all, of which 3,858 are now in operation. Of these 174 have been organized during the last year, with a capital of $21,[illegible]000,000; circulation, $2,900,000. Twenty-four banks went into voluntary liquidation during the year, one ceased to exist by expiration of charter, and eight failed. Since the beginning of the system in 1863, only 112 national banks have failed. Of these, sixty-three have paid their creditors in full, and twenty have paid interest and principal in full and five in part. Over 90 per cent. of all national bank stocks is held in the residents of the State in which the bank is located, more than 91 per cent. is held by natural persons, and 96 per cent. of the number of shareholders are citizens. The total number of shareholders is 223,000, the total number of shares over 7,000,000. The effect of the reduction of the public debt and the withdrawal from bonds upon the volume of national bank circulation is very fully illustrated in the report. The contraction in national bank circulation during the year exceeds $56,000,000.

Besides the usual tables showing the condition of national banks at various dates, the report has two new tables, the first showing the aggregate of resources and liabilities. The banks in the several States, reserve cities, and Territories, have their condition stated separately. A large diagram exhibiting the many features of the national banking system and its variations during the last twenty-one years accompanies the report. From this it appears that the aggregate deposits in the banks has increased from $522,000,000 in January, 1885, to $1,173,000,000 in January, 1886, while loans and discounts have risen from $500,000,000 to $1,441,000,000.

The specie held by the national banks in 1886 was $15,000,000; in October, 1875, it was $17,000,000; while in July, 1885, it was $117,000,000, and in June $156,000,000.

Mr. Trenholm declines to say whether his report contains any specific recommendations in regard to a modification of the law making United States bonds the basis of the national bank circulation, but it is understood at the department that he has presented a strong array of facts and figures to show how valuable the system has become to the entire country, and how important it is that it should be made adaptable to the needs of communities in the West and South, where vast natural resources await development by the aid of outside capital.

NAVAL AFFAIRS.

How to Promote the Efficiency of the Navy—Admiral Porter's Suggestions.

Admiral Porter has submitted to the Secretary of the Navy a report embodying suggestions for improving the efficiency of the navy. He says that in mechanical skill our navy there is no subject worthy of more consideration than the question of coal, and regrets that the ironclads have had up at City Point, which are so well adapted for supply purposes, should be left in the condition they are to-day. He says the new ironclads have given no evidence of great speed, and it is feared by those most interested that they never will, which will render them useless as commerce-destroyers. He recommends a number of changes for the navy the following classes of vessels:

The first-class should be represented by about 3,000 tons, and should be able to make a few hours a speed of fourteen and one-half knots. The second-class, to serve as flagships on foreign stations, should be vessels of not less than 4,500 nor more than 5,000 tons, able to make for a few hours a speed of nineteen knots. The third-class should be a cruiser of 2,700 tons, able to make for a few hours a speed of eighteen knots.

The Admiral remarks that the proposed thirteen inch gunboat with four guns could pass a coastal battery, and a powerful Chinese gunboat would be more than a match for it.

The United States is making the same mistake as Europe, and is spending money in building so many different classes of vessels at the outset, without knowing how many of them will meet the requirements of the service of the present day. No nation, he says, can dispense with forts, but they have to be supported from a navy to protect our coasts. Instead of matching one armored frigate against another, as we have at present, every year we should be building a fleet of four double-turreted monitors, no matter if we do not land any cruisers in the mountains.

Admiral Porter says that he has seen enough of torpedoes to know that two or three hundred pounds of gun-cotton exploded under a ship—no matter what her size—is bound to sink her or place her in a sinking condition. Yankee ingenuity, if stimulated by the prospect of a sufficient reward, would no doubt soon give us a superior torpedo. He commends the Paterson torpedo, and says what we require to do now is to have a few of the vessel fitted to the world something that torpedo destroyers can not overtake.

The report treats of the reorganization of the different branches of the navy, and especially of the Navy Department. The Admiral takes strong ground in favor of the Government encouraging the private shipyards of the country by giving them all the work possible to enable them to compete with those so that in time of war they will be in condition to meet the Government in building and repairing vessels. He also advocates a Government iron ship-building yard.

Though the works are at present losing money to the city, and are in need of repairs that will cost about $250,000, the Colonel, who has had extensive experience in such matters, claims that by better business management than a municipality can give such an enterprise he can make a handsome profit off the plant and keep it in better condition than the city would.

Bohemian Oats.

[From the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.]

A curious case of speculation has been developed in legal fare by the arrest in the city of W. H. Clark, a wealthy farmer of Gravesend, Mich. Clark, it appears, was indicted to enter with others into a large cash speculation two years ago, buying a large quantity of oats of an agent of a western railway (of the Bohemian Oat and Cereal Company, located at Ypsilanti. The agent sold the grain to Clark for $10 per bushel, and gave him a bond that the company would this year sell for him double the quantity he purchased at the same price per bushel, about a month ago the agent appeared and sold the double quantity to other farmers. The company cleared 33 per cent. profit in oats and Clark was given notes which he discovered to be nearly worthless. Clark and others of the company to this city and intends bringing the matter into the Criminal Court. The same scheme has been worked extensively in Western New York, and inter-state developments are expected. The company cleared over $100,000 by its scheme in Michigan.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notwithstanding the large payments of the national debt in the past two months there has been an increase during that time of nearly one million dollars in the national treasury. It is a notable fact that during the same period, although $5,000,000 in silver was coined, there there was a decrease of $9,000,000 in silver dollars and bullion. As business revived to meet the demands for goods for fall and winter consumption the call for fractional silver in the country increased and a consequent falling off of about $1,500,000 in the amount held by the treasury. The heaviest demand for silver dollars is reported from the west and south.

In the great cities the press is arrogant, dictatorial and assumes to rule over and domineer over the opinions of the people. In this the press only shows in what contempt it is held by an independent people. The country press only assumes to be a reflex of the opinion of the community. It is also representive, and can be and often is influential and leading. It often seeks to influence and lead, but never to drive the people. And this is the reason that the country press possess twenty times as much power as the metropolitan press. It is not the great dailies but the country press that shape the politics of the nation.—Madison (Wis.) Democrat.

The all absorbing question that will confront the incoming congress will be the surplus in the treasury. Notwithstanding the tremendous expenditures of the present fiscal year, it is now evident, owing to a greater efficiency and economy of the collecting machinery of the government under democratic rule, the fiscal year ending July 1st, 1887, will show a net surplus of over $100,000,000. By that time every dollar of the national debt that can be paid in many years will have been paid. Congress must decide, and it must do so at once, what shall be done.

Shall the surplus be hoarded?

Shall the surplus be spent?

Shall the surplus be prevented?

The first means ruin, speedy and terrible to all business. The second also means ruin, but in a different way. It is plain that the surplus should be prevented, and this can be done by revising the tariff, cutting off the burdensome war taxes, and still leave all the protection necessary. It must be done.—Cheboygan Democrat.

"This talk about the national banks making a big profit on their circulation is founded on false assumptions," said a leading banker the other day. "Why, so lightly does our bank esteem the prerogative of issuing bank notes that we have recently decided to cut down our circulation from $100,000 to $50,000." In his attempt to show that the issue power of the banks is not as profitable as it is popularly supposed to be, this leading banker has unwittingly exposed one of the most dangerous features of the systems. It is not the profit on the circulation which is complained of by the opponents of the national banking system. It is the checks control which is given thereby over the volume of the people's money, that is objected to. Here is a bank which finds its interest rate getting low, and it accordingly reduces its circulation by one half. Two effects of this—especially if a similar course is pursued by other banks, which is generally the case, because conditions which affect one bank are likely to affect all—is to seriously curtail the volume of money and thereby correspondingly increase the value of the portion that remains in circulation. This results again in putting more value into stocks, bonds mortgages and all forms of indebtedness and in increasing the interest rate. The exercise of such a transfusion power is a constant menace to the republic, and we say that it should not be lodged with any individual, or set of individuals, who may be pleased to organize themselves into a national banking institution. The Journal is in favor of a government currency. The present corporation currency furnished by the banks is the tool of Shylock to forge chains for the people.—Lansing Journal.

Pretty Girls of Dublin.

Ireland is noted for its beautiful women, and the girls of Dublin are as pretty as those of any city in the world. They have, as a rule, fair, rosy complexions and good forms, and they know how to dress the latter. I attended a regatta at Dalkey, the great yachting place near Dublin, and saw some several thousands of the better class of girls of Ireland. The poorer classes were shut out by the higher prices of the inclosure allotted to us, and the crowd was a kid-gloved one. The girls seemed to be remarkably healthy and in high spirits, and they showed, as I could judge from the witty remarks I heard in passant, all the love of humor for which old Ireland is famous. The Irish brogue coming out of the pearly teeth of a rosy-cheeked, bright-eyed Irish girl sounds very sweet indeed, and, were I a millionaire American with one or two American girl babies, I would bring them to Ireland to raise them for the sake of their complexions. The beauties are not, however, confined to the upper classes. I saw pretty girls everywhere, and many a sweet face there is among the white-capped servant girls of the hotels, and even among the workers in the fields, or in the cotters huts.—Cleveland Leader.

"I think there ought to be a law," said Mrs. Swell, "compelling mosquitoes to wear muzzles at this season of the year. It's just too bad." "What's too bad?" asked Mr. Gush. "The horrid mosquitoes, of course." "What have they done now?" "Why, they have prevented Matilda from going to the seaside." "Mosquitoes prevented you?" "Yes, mosquitoes prevented her from going. The horrid little things bit her in the small of the back and raised a red welt. We've tried camphor and everything, but cannot make it disappear. With that insightly blotch there she cannot wear a low-necked dress, and so she has decided to stay at home. Isn't it too bad?"—St. Paul Pioneer.

"Mistah Johnsing, I t'ink you's sufferin' wid a affexion ob de heart. Yo' heart-beats is ter'ble irregu'lar." SCHOLS OF OUR FARMER PATRONS. It is no exaggerated claim to assert that the intelligent readers on farms, or retired from public life to rural homes, of the AGRICULTURIST, have been at an outlay of over $50,000, aggregating over twenty inches in size of their time, trying to write with special descriptive papers by James Parton, Donald G. Mitchell, and other eminent contributors to our authors. These engravings contained in magazines and other publications, at amounts far beyond the walls of a prince or peasant's home. Subscriptions for 1887 immediately forwarded are entitled to all the series, beginning with the issue for January.

PROGRESS OF THE U. S. GOVERNMENT—Vol. viii, fourth volume U. S. says: "The American Agriculturist is especially worthy of mention, because of the remarkable success that has attended the unique and untiring efforts of its proprietors to place before the public, at a cost of $50,000 to $100,000 are dedicated annually, for a German edition, which also circulates in Germany.

More Railroad Rumors.

ELK RAPIDS, Nov. 29.—There is a strong belief current here that the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad branch now building from the main line to Williamsburg will be extended to this place, a distance of only nine miles, thereby getting the start of the Chicago & West Michigan proposed extension via. Traverse City to this point and Charlevoix.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—S. Stovall, M.D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases. —M. A. Gest, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physicians told me to give up business, or I would not live through the winter. Nothing relieved me without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been prostrated incurable with Consumption.—S. S. Henderson, Sanbburgh, Penn.

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured. —Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

The public school entertainment will be held next Wednesday evening, at the opera house. A very attractive program is being prepared, including a section of Mrs. Jarley's "Wax Works," in which teachers and pupils will personate some of her most amusing figures. Great care has been exercised in drilling, and a fine entertainment is assured.

Frederick N. Peck, of the Kalamazoo Gazette, while sleigh riding Saturday, discovered that a horse driven by Mrs. A. J. Shakespeare was running away. The occupants of the Shakespearian sleigh were Mrs Shakespeare and her daughter. Mr. Peck drove alongside the frightened steed, reached out and grasped the bridle, leaped from his cutter and stopped the horse.

We would gently remind team owners and teamsters of the village ordinance, prohibiting teams and sleighs from traveling in or about the village without a bell or bells attached to the same. The fine for neglecting to conform to this ordinance is $2.00. Children and even adult people, are liable to receive injuries from the approach of horses or sleighs, without proper warning.

The schooner Metropolis, loaded with lumber and iron for Chicago and which cleared this dock on the night of the 24th, ran ashore that night at 9 p. m., on Old Mission point during a blinding snow storm. The captain and crew are safe. The vessel and cargo were insured. The Metropolis was about as ancient a craft as could be found on the lakes. She was built at Cleveland in 1857, and received extensive repairs in 1874-75 and 1880 81. She was valued at $6,000.—Progress.

There is a new racket going the rounds that beats the chestnut bell all to pieces. Whenever a fellow tells a story that is a little musty, or tries to perpetrate any bad puns, nobody answers at him—as used to be the rings a bell. First some one will step up and shake hands with him silently and solemnly. Then another fellow, then another, and so on all around. About the time the second man's hand is extended the victim begins to feel warm in his hand and cool and hot by turns under his vest and by the time the third hand is ready he is in a state of collapse.

A press dispatch says that the new river and harbor bill recommends the following appropriations for Michigan: Detroit river, $130,000; Sault Ste. Marie, 400,000; Saginaw river, $100,000; St. Clair ship canal, $67,500; St. Mary's river, $400,000; Black Lake harbor, $30,000; Pine Lake, $60,000; Cheboygan, $20,000; Frankfort, $25,000; Big Sable, $5,000; Grand Haven, $60,000; Grand Marais, $100,000; Ludington, $120,000; Manistee, $30,000; Monroe, $42,000; Muskegon, $80,000; Ontonagon, $25,000; Portage Lake harbor of refuge, $135,000; Pentwater, $150,000; Menominee, $90,000.

In its department of home missionary work, referring to the collection and expenditure of funds, the Presbytery of Detroit, last week had the following of interest to Charlevoix readers: "A part of the money raised by the society is to be devoted to paying the salary of Rev. C. F. Van Anken, formerly of Charlevoix, now state evangelist. Though he has not been engaged in his new work very long good results are already apparent. The following is an extract from a letter from one of the conference presidents in regard to his work at Chester: Mr. Van Anken has just been helping in a good revival meeting at Chester, Eaton county, Olivet conference. There were about sixty conversions, fifteen of them men, among the most influential of the neighborhood, and most of them upwards of 40 or 45 years of age. Mr. Van Anken is now at work with the church at Eastlake, northern central conference."

Fire at East Jordan.

Sunday morning about 4 o'clock fire broke out in Louis Votruba's frame store on State street and burned three buildings and part of the contents. The loss is as follows: L. C. Madison, drugs and household goods and building, $1,200, no insurance; Louis Votruba, grocery and provisions, building and household goods, $2,000, insured $1,300; E. Russel, household goods about $50, no insurance; F. Burdick, groceries, provisions, meat market, household goods, $2,000, no insurance. Burdick had made application Saturday evening for insurance to commence Monday noon; Chas. Fairchilds, harness stock, loss $500.

Four families occupied the three buildings as residences upstairs. Votruba kept several boarders all of whom lost more or less, as the fire caught in this building. Louis Votruba came near being burned up. He was sleeping in the store room, and when awakened his bed clothes were on fire. It is not definitely known just how the fire originated. There was snow on the roofs of the adjacent buildings and there being no wind blowing prevented a disastrous fire, as the place is without fire apparatus. The citizens, however, did noble work in saving the property of J. C. Glenn. Mr. Glenn was considerably burned but not seriously. E. Burdick will rebuild at once.

Historical Society.

"Shakespeare night," Friday even ing, Dec. 3, at the home of Prof. H. M. Enos was a complete success, both in its literary and social features.

The following program was rendered:

An article upon Shakespeare as playwright and actor, read by Miss Maggie O'Neil. Vocal solo, "The Good Time Coming," by W. S. Smith, by special request. Selection from Henry VIII. "The Fall of Wooksey," Miss Maggie Enos. Instrumental selection, Mrs. Ella Smith. Instrumental duet, Mrs. Fred Smith and Mrs. O. D. Wood.

Roll call answered by quotations from Shakespeare.

Sketch of "Skylock," Prof. Enos; "Macbeth," H. Lee Iddings; instrumental selection, Miss Maggie Enos.

The program was worthy of the special occasion. Of Shakespeare we would re echo the words of Milton:

"Then in our wonder and astonishment,
Had built Him a Brazen monument."

The society will meet Friday evening, Dec. 10, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Clark, at which time Rev. W. H. McCartney will speak upon the eclectic question, and other interesting exercises will be provided.

FACE TO FACE.

BY PAUL H. HAYNE.

Sad mortal! couldst thou but know
What truly it means to die,
Thou too, of thy soul would glow,
And the hopes of thy heart best high!
Thou would'st turn from the Pythian schools
And laugh their jargon to scorn,
As the babble of midnight fools
To the morning of truth be born!
But, as thou art, poor, blind slave,
In a kingdom of shoreless breath—
I gaze on the glory of love,
In the unveiled face of death.

I feel thine his face is fair
As the moon-lore's amber rings,
And the gleam in his unbound hair
Like the first of a thousand Springs;
His smile is the faithfulness beam
Of the shining sacred light,
Where the mansions of Southland dream
In the lap of the Infinite Night;
For I, earth's dimness above,
I gaze on the marvel of love
In the unveiled face of Death.

In his eyes a heaven there dwells—
But they hold few mysteries now—
And his pity for earth's farewells
Half throws that shining brow;
Yet, even as Time's cold tide
Has broken in mortal breast,
Ere the crimson the crown of rest;
And with earth's machines above,
In a kingdom of shoreless breath,
I gaze on a light that is love
In the unveiled face of Death.

Through the splendor of stars imparted
In too glare of their far-off grace,
Do I catch a word by world,
Low, sweet, and yet strong enough;
Lone there, unalterably a word
At the passage of Death's darkest,
With the fragrance that flows behind
The flash of his winged retreat:
Lo! I hear it in numbers above,
Where kingdom of tranquil breath,
Have passed into Love!
In the unveiled face of Death.

But beyond the stars and the sun
I can follow him still on his way,
Till the Father's face shines on me
In the realm of the central day.
Far voices of fond welcome
Thrill down from the place of souls,
As Death, with a touch like flame,
Leads home his ransomed souls.
And from out of heavens above
God speaketh the ineffable breath—
My angel of perfect love,
Is the angel now call Death!

NELLIE'S NOBLE DEEDS.

BY ABBIE C. MEEKER.

"Thimble Alley! Oh, what a dreadful place! but there's no one can mend my lace equal to Mrs. Smith. Little boy, does Mrs. Rachel Smith live here?

"Yes'm, fifth story, first door to your right," and the ragged urchin eyed the fine lady with wide, open eyes.

"Lor', ain't she some?" he said, to a near companion, "all shiny-like and soft. Whooper! if mammy had some o' her finery we'd have a holiday dinner well as Biddy O'Brien."

"Ho! ho! Tim," roared the other, "the idea of a dinner out o' finery."

"I meant to set it, you know well enough, I wonder who she is?"

But in the meantime Nellie Strong had reached the fifth floor and stood, almost out of breath, peering down the wretched hallway where poverty held sway.

"How can they live so?" she thought. "What horrid colors, and there's a half dozen babies crying below. Poor little things!" then she knocked on the door before her.

"Come in," called out a woman's voice.

Nellie pushed the creaking door open and entered the small, bare chamber.

At its one window a woman sat mending some costly lace. In a corner on a cot reclined a pale, young girl. There was no fire in the room, although the air was keen and frosty.

"Good morning, Mrs. Smith. I called with some work; I wanted this lace mended particularly before the ball, and so I sought you out myself.

"Yes, Miss Strong; be seated, pray. Let me look at the lace, please."

Nellie took the one vacant chair and turned her bright eyes upon the pale young girl on the cot.

"Are you an invalid?" she gently inquired.

"Oh, yes; I have been one always. I never could walk, but I do not suffer much now."

"You don't mean to tell me that you lain here all your life?" cried Nellie, "and never saw anything but these bare walls?"

"Alas, at all my life. It isn't so bad for me as you would think. The neighbors are kind, and mother brings me a flower now and then, and we talk of what might be if God's good stranger. Talk is cheap," smiled the invalid.

"I don't think I could do this before Wednesday. Will that answer, Miss Strong?"

"Oh, yes," said Nellie, carelessly, "as slow as I make it all. Just lay aside, Mrs. Smith, have you ever consulted a good physician about your disease?"

"I have often wished to do so, but could not afford it.

Just then a little tow-headed, dirty-faced girl of five or six years thrust her head in the doorway.

"Please, Miss Sallth, the baby's worse. Mother thinks it's dyin'."

"Oh!" exclaimed Nellie, "whose baby?"

"An Irish woman's down stairs. An attack of croup; the weather has been cool, and the little fellow caught cold. Yes, Mary, I'll come. You'll excuse me a moment, Miss Strong."

"Yes; but may not I go, too—poor little baby?"

And timidly drawing her silken skirts about her, she followed Mrs. Smith into the room of the Irish washerwoman, where upon a straw bed lay a little six-months-old baby dying, as was evident at a glance.

"He's the first one," sobbed the poor mother. "I've only four left, and his father couldn't stop work long enough to see his die, his loss is that hard on him. My baby! oh, my baby!"

Nellie drew out a bill from her purse and placed it in the poor mother's hand.

"You'll need things for—forthe funeral," she said, softly; "take it. I'll come and see you again."

"Lord love your sweet face," cried the woman, with a wild fit of weeping. "You're that kind, mum, I don't know how to thank you. Tell me the best deal child that I could ever pay for its coffin. Oh, how sweet he'll look all in white!"

As they passed out of the room of death a party of men came up the stairs bearing a bier form between them.

"What is it?" asked Nellie, of Mrs. Smith, drawing closer to her.

"Some accident, evidently. What has happened, Pete?" she inquired of one of the men.

"Mr. Swasher fell from the building, a matter of twenty feet, and we think both his legs are broken. There comes the doctor."

"Poor man," sighed Mrs. Smith. "I don's know what we'l become of his family; he was their only support. You look inexpressibly pained. These things are common enough to all large tenements. We see sorrow and suffering around us continually."

And she wondered why the lady followed her up to her room again.

"I wish," said Nellie to the invalid girl, "you would allow me to send you an infantile physician; he is one of the best in the city. I think he can help you."

"Oh, if you only would!" exclaimed the mother. "Lulu might be helped, I have always believed."

"Yes, and, Mrs. Smith, you need not hurry about the lace. I don't think I'll need it, but I'll pay you for the work now.

Before Mrs. Smith could get her glasses on to examine the bill in her lap, her visitor had gone.

"Oh, Lulu!" she exclaimed, "it's a twenty-dollar bill; she's made a mistake."

But Lulu wiped away a tear from her wan cheek, and smiled up in her mother's face.

"No mistake, mother; the beautiful lady meant it for us. I'm sure I saw two full of tears. Heaven bless her tender heart!"

"I presume the holiday party and so on is being rushed along," said Mr. Strong, as his daughter entered the dressing-room. "How big a check is to be called for, pet? Don't be too hard on your old father."

Nellie did not reply at once; she took her place at the table, glanced over the dainty appointments, the snowy damask, silken fine, the costly silver, the beautiful flowers, the rare fruits, and all the luxuries that wealth can give. And her eyes wandered to her two fair young sisters, and her mother's face behind the urn, and last back to her father's face, who just now was regarding her with smiling, questioning eyes.

"Papa," she said, flushing slightly, "I—I want a generous check, true enough, but I think I'll rearrange my programme."

"I thought so," smiled her father. "What a tell-tale face you possess. What's the latest freak? out with it.

"Oh Nellie, everything was perfect; invitations all ready to send out. You're not going to spoil our party," cried her sisters.

"I hope not," said Nellie; "but first I want to tell you all about my visit to Thimble Alley."

She told it as it was, and at its close the youngest of the girls exclaimed:

"I know now, Nellie; you thought what a big sensation your party would make in Thimble Alley."

"Yes," said Nellie, "if papa is willing."

"My eldest born," said her father fondly, "your papa's purse has a long string, still it might be stretched too far. I always did dislike the fuss of a party, and I guess I can trust your prudent head to control your tender heart. Give the Thimble-Alleyites a generous dinner on your birthday and what you will. I'll see that Dr. Moore calls upon the lace-mender's daughter."

Not fairly hands, oh, no! but human, loving hands that did the work, some of them rough and black that shoveled in the coal into the empty bins; some of them small and chapped that helped along their dinner. But were the stars alone out, not one in that large tenement building went to sleep cold or hungry on that holiday night.

Nellie, said John softly, "the doctor says I will soon be well enough to sit in my chair all around, and that possibly, some day, I may walk about with the help of crutches."

"Yes, my darling, I know."

"And when I told him all about Miss Strong's noble deeds, and praised her tender heart, he smiled and looked so pleased I felt pleased, his secret. May Heaven bless them both."

"Amen," breathed her mother tearfully.

Short Sermons.

I long ago dun made up my mind dat skrrange humanity expects too much on dis earth, an dat we am all too selfish to really enjoy ourselves.

If we plan for a buckleberry excursion we look for the sun to shine, an if we have a fine-good-day, we expect to get a buckleberry excursion. Dat's human nature, no matter how much our naybur's co'n an taters want rain.

If dar am any danger of spring frosts we expects dey will fly over our garden as light down on somebody else's truck-patch.

We expect cyclones now an' den in de natural order of things, but we doan' expect 'em to hit our farm and de county. We am sorry fur sich people as was in de way, but dey orter bin som'ers else.

If we take in a tramp over night we expect him to be honest an' grateful. If anybody else takes in one an' gives him a clean, cut verdict am dat it sarved 'em right.

We expect to git de big end of de trade when we swap hosses wid a man, but if we dishiver dat we bev been cheated we want de law to punish him for a swindler.

Most of us am willin' to take our chances on matrimony, if de gal am good-lookin' or de young man has cash, but when de rollin' pins begin to fly we blame our friends dat dey didn't warn us.

If we lose our pocket-book we argy dat de pusson who find it am as bad as a thief if he doan' return it. But if we some one else's pocket-book we—well, it comes like pullin' teeth to let go.

We respect our naybur, but we want our beets an' cabbage co'ns to keep a week ahead of his.

We doan' know of any partickler reason why lightnin' should strike our naybs, but we kin furnish half a dozen reasons why it should burn ha'ss all around us.

We begin in October to predict mild winter, an' if we happen to git one we kick like a steer de nex' summer because we have to pay mo' fur ice.

I tell ye, my frens, when I come to realize jest what a queer piece of clay we am, an' how much workin' oder we need to come out perfect, I can't wonder ober de shoutin' and hurrahin' in Heaven when one of us grown folks finds his way in.—Detroit Free Press.

UNION PACIFIC REPORT.

Large Increase in the Earnings of the Road—Funded-Debt Statement.

The report of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railway shows that the surplus earnings of the entire system, comprising 4,501 miles, for the nine months ended September 30, after deducting operating expenses and taxes, was $6,118,242. To this must be added interest and profit from investments, land sales, etc., which brings the total income up to $8,119,820. From this must be deducted: Discount and interest paid.....$1,407,487; sinking fund requirements, company's bonds.....249,995; interest on bonds of operated roads.....2,347,000; Land department expenses, Union Pacific.....11,728; One-half of loss in operating Leavenworth, Topeka and Southwestern Railway.....11,721. Total.....$3,726,930. This leaves a net surplus of $2,392,890, from which deduct $300,000 for United States requirements, leaving a surplus balance of $2,188,927. Compared with the first nine months of 1885, the gross earnings increased $881,656, or 4.8 per cent. The passenger earnings increased $42,000, and the freight earnings $767,777. The mail earnings show a decrease of $8,740, the express earnings, $9,663, and the miscellaneous earnings $46,625.

The increase in operating expenses was $1,189,000, or 10 per cent, of which $166,916 was for maintenance of way expenses and $153,800 for car expenses. On the average road mileage the gross earnings per mile were from $4,000 in 1885 to $4,230 in 1886, an increase of $155, or 3 per cent. The Pacific road earnings, which in 1885 represented 5.5 per cent of the total, fell off in 1886 to a point where they represent but 7.4 per cent. The earnings of the system from traffic interchanged with the branch-line system twelve months were in gross $5,220,978, or about 30 per cent, of the total earnings of the parent company. As this traffic is done at less average cost than is other business, the net earnings from it are estimated at over $1,000,000, or 50 per cent, of the total net earnings. This is in addition to the net earnings of the branch lines themselves, after paying all fixed charges, which were $1,193,450 for the nine months of 1886, and indicate the vital importance of the branch line system to the main system. The following is a comparative statement of the funded and other debts of the entire system Dec. 31, 1885:

Funded debt in the hands of the public	$127,498,000
Add Union Pacific bonds in the hands of the public	16,400,000
Total funded debt	143,898,000
Less company's sinking fund	3,775,172
Total funded debt	140,122,828
Less company's land grant bonds	2,777,000
Balance of debt	137,345,828
Deduct land grant assets	29,463,981
Debt in excess of land assets	107,881,847
Miles of road	4,501
Debt per mile	23,967

The mileage and debts of the Central branch and the St. Joseph and Grand Island Company are not included in this statement.

THE PACIFIC ROADS.

Commissioner Johnston's Annual Statement of Their Financial Condition.

General Joseph E. Johnston, Commissioner of Railroads, in his annual report says that the Union Pacific is a first-class road, and in excellent condition. The financial state of the road is summarized as follows:

Total debt	$135,412,092
Capital stock	60,868,267
Total stock and debt	220,202,359
Total assets	219,865,396
Surplus	33,837,037

Among the assets is $21,604,111, claimed by the company, repaid to the United States. Treasury Department reports show settled accounts and money paid into the Treasury June 30, 1886, aggregating $20,674,414, or $929,727 less than the amount claimed by the company. The company's credits are increased, however, by accumulated interest on sinking-fund investments, $418,560, making the total credits June 30, 1886, $24,422,974.

The gross earnings of the Union Division for the year 1885 were $12,215,484; expenditures allowed under the Thurman act, $7,761,566, leaving $4,453,879 as net earnings, of which the Government is entitled to 75 per cent, or $3,113,469. The amount found due from the Union Division is $141,019, making a total of $1,254,489 due from both divisions. The funded debt of the Union Pacific Company June 30, 1886, was $135,412,092, as against $141,757,000 the year before, a net decrease of $1,393,907. The revenue of the Union Pacific Company for the year ended Dec. 31, 1885, was $26,806,836; expenditures, $21,944,704; surplus, $4,121,932; surplus, excluding expenditures for new construction and equipment, $3,345,000. The net earnings were $8,404,676, against $8,941,969 in 1884. The net earnings were $1,"2,774, against $87,250 in 1884. The report of the Commissioner of the Central Pacific Company the Commissioner found in excellent condition. The gross earnings of the "Pacific system" for the year ended June 30, 1886, compared with those of the preceding year, show a decrease of $419,200, and the net earnings increased $2,130,512, or 51.8 per cent. The financial condition of the road June 30, 1886, is summarized as follows:

Total debt	$122,148,500
Capital stock	26,615,000
Total stock and debt	148,763,500
Total assets	130,044,000
Surplus	18,433,176

The sinking funds of the Union and Central Pacific Companies, June 30, 1886, held by the Treasurer of the United States, amounted to $6,038,712, the Union Pacific being to its credit $6,419,351, and the Central Pacific $5,619,361.

Of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company the Commissioner says that the gross earnings for the year were $2,901; that of the seventy-five miles unfinished on the Cascade Division probably only five miles will be left at the end of the year. The total number of acres of land received by the company from the United States up to 1886, was 11,629,820, of which 5,830,871 have been sold. From these sales the company has received $20,835,000, and there is still outstanding on time sales $7,070,000. The total debt of the company June 30, 1886, was $52,526,000; capital stock, $47,000,000. Total stock and debt, $100,386,000; total assets, $100,000,000; surplus, $2,855,000. The earnings of the road for the year ended June 30, 1886, were $11,736,527; expenses, $6,156,263; net earnings, $5,580,264; interest, expenses of $836,414, or 10.64 per cent, over last year.

COMMISSIONER COLMAN.

The Second Annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Norman J. Colman, Commissioner of Agriculture, in his annual report, describes in general terms the progress made in agriculture during the past year and the conditions which contributed to make this "the best-fed nation on the globe." He urges the passage of the bill now before Congress for the establish ment of agricultural experiment stations in connection with the agricultural colleges. In commenting upon the work of the bureau of animal industry, he describes the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and says:

"Every effort possible under existing laws has been made to locate the diseased animals and isolate all that have been exposed. It would have been most fortunate if every animal exposed to the disease and liable to contract it could have been summarily slaughtered and the contagion thus eradicated. With a disease of this character at Chicago, it has been truly said that the cattle industry of this country has reached a crisis. There can be no doubt that it will be soon and widely disseminated unless prompt and effectual action can be instituted for its speedy suppression. Even now it may have been scattered to some extent in the West, and the investigations of the next year will probably bring other outbreaks to light. The subject is a most important one, overshadowing in urgency all others after our agricultural prosperity, and of vital interest also to every consumer of beef, of milk, of butter, and of cheese. To prevent the spread of the disease, which has already greatly affected our foreign and interstate commerce, additional legislation by Congress is now essential.

"Much valuable work has already been done in Maryland, and the danger of the dissemination of the contagion from that State has been greatly lessened. No work has been done in the State of New York, because it was evident that the appropriation was not sufficient to secure any results adequate to results commensurate with the expenditure. The State has refused to pay for diseased animals," said he, "and as a consequence poor people who happen to possess one or two cows will conceal the fact of the existence of the disease from the authorities until whole herds become affected. If the State would vote to pay for the diseased cattle, as it should do, and take hold of the matter in earnest, we might yet stamp out the disease. But as matters now look our State is doomed to see its cattle interests ruined."

DEADLY FIRE-DAMP.

Terrific and Fatal Explosion in a Coal Mine at Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania.

Twelve to Fifteen Men Mortally Injured, and Thirty Others More or Less Hurt.

(Wilkesbarre (Pa.) special.)

Forty-two men were seriously burned by an explosion of fire-damp Friday morning in the Conyngham shaft, owned and operated by the Delaware and Hudson Company. Several other persons were slightly injured. Of the forty-two men seven were burned two hour since dead, and ten more will probably die. Two miners, whose names are unknown, are missing, and it is believed that they were blown into a vacant containing thirty feet of water and were drowned. The names of the dead are: Thomas O'Brien, aged thirty, a miner, leaves a wife and large family; Cornelius Boyle, aged thirty-eight, miner, leaves a wife and family. The names of those believed to be fatally burned are: Hugh Sweeney, aged 21, laborer; Edward Kane, aged 25, laborer; Richard Coulter, aged 30, miner, has a wife and family; Condy Gallagher, aged 31, miner, has a wife and large family; John Cannon, aged 40, miner, has a wife and family; Christopher Branagan, aged 35, laborer; Michael O'Brien, aged 35, laborer; Daniel Ferry, aged 25, miner, has a wife and large family; John Dougherty, aged 31, laborer; Dennis McGlade, aged 46, miner.

The shaft was known to contain gas. No work was done Thursday, and consequently there was more gas than usual in it. The accident occurred at 7:10 a. m., while fifty miners and laborers were sitting at the foot of the shaft, waiting for the inside boss. The accident was due to the carelessness of Cornelius Boyle, who has, all the penalty with his life. Boyle entered a place with a lighted lamp, and a naked light on his hat, and the explosion followed. The miners were killed and wounded, and great damage was done to the inside workings of the shaft.

The scene at the colliery while the injured men were being taken from the shaft was terrible. A crowd of several hundred people had gathered at the mouth of the shaft, among them the wives, mothers, and daughters of the injured men. As the victims were taken out of the pit they were brought to the engine-house, and the women made desperate efforts to gain entrance. The frantic demonstrations of grief were heart-rending, but they were sternly kept outside the building, while the black, smeared, scorched, and bleeding victims of the disaster were wrapped in blankets soaked in oil. The engine-house floor was covered with writhing human forms so disguised by fire as to be unrecognizable, as fast as possible they were taken to the hospital or to their homes.

A DISASTROUS SEASON.

Many Vessels Destroyed and Lives Lost on the Lakes.

(Chicago telegram.)

The recent storm has practically put a stop to navigation for the season of 1886. Vessels coming in from other lake ports are being stripped and sent into winter quarters in the various slips.

The season has been good one so far as freights were concerned, but the underwriters have suffered heavily and the loss of human life has been great. For the seventeen thirty-three vessels have been driven on shore or foundered, with more or less loss. The schooners L. J. Conway, Belle Walbridge, Smith Haven, Hattie Andrews, Florida, Helen, Menekaunee, Marinette, Dickerson, and Emerald and the tug propeller Robert Wallace are total losses, and represent a money value of nearly $300,000 in vessel property. What the value of the cargoes was cannot be accurately computed, but will probably double that amount.

The schooner Lucerne, which foundered in Lake Superior with a load of iron ore, took with her the entire crew of ten men. Not a single body was recovered. Eight more were lost on the Manistee and seven on the Menekaunee, only one man of the two crews escaping. The scow Hiem went to pieces off Muskegon, and her entire crew of seven men were drowned. The schooner Florida, with a crew of ten, went to pieces off Marquette. The crew was lost. A little boy accompanied the male sailors, who was caught between the rigging and the vessel and squeezed to death. The Dickenson and Emerald broke adrift from the tug Justice Field and went into the lake. Eight men and a little girl perished. Seven were lost, making a total of forty-one sailors who have lost their lives by the wrecking of vessels this season.

CATTLE PLAGUE IS RAGING.

Thousands of Cases Discovered by the Export Veterinarians.

(Chicago dispatch.)

The work of appraising cattle at the Phoenix Distillery was completed yesterday. Two hundred and twenty-nine animals were appraised at an average valuation of $26. The commission will visit Schofield's establishment to-day, and begin upon the 300 head contained there. It appears probable that all of next week will be required to finish the work at the distilleries, and that no slaughtering will be done for some time yet.

It is becoming daily more apparent that the disease is much more widespread than was at first supposed. The expert veterinarians who are at work among the stockyards claim that thousands of cattle are constantly discovering cases in the most unlooked-for places, and between 200 and 300 suspected cases are known to exist in this county. A prominent member of the commission said last night that, in his opinion, the disease was not so far rooted here that it could not be eradicated. "The State has refused to pay for diseased animals," said he, "and as a consequence poor people who happen to possess one or two cows will conceal the fact of the existence of the disease from the authorities until whole herds become affected. If the State would vote to pay for the diseased cattle, as it should do, and take hold of the matter in earnest, we might yet stamp out the disease. But as matters now look our State is doomed to see its cattle interests ruined."

Two 1886 Gold Medals.

Messrs. Mason & Hamlin again have the distinguished honor of having been awarded the highest gold medals over all exhibitors, American and European, both at Edinburgh and at Liverpool, the two most important exhibitions of the year 1886. Since the first great Paris Exhibition of 1867, the Mason & Hamlin Organs have invariably received the highest honors at all great world's exhibitions.

Too Many Railways.

There are, it is said, about 125,000 miles of rail road in this country, much more than there ought to be. It has often been asserted that 1,000 people are required to support a mile of road, and we have more than a mile to every 500. In no other land are there anything like so many railways, and they have all been built within 40 years. In 1830 there were 23 miles of road; in 1840, nearly 3,000; in 1850, 9,000; and in 1861, 16,000 miles were in operation. In the past 15 years more roads have been built than were built during the previous forty years. Railroad building is irregular. We overbuild for a while, and then a reaction ensues. In 1882 we built 11,000 miles; in 1883, 7,000 miles; and we are at present building about 4,000 or 5,000 miles a year. The average cost of construction and equipment of a railroad is $60,000 a mile. The value of railway property in the United States is enormous—about one-seventh, it is said, of the entire property of the republic. The excessive building will no doubt continue. Many persons predict that at the close of the century we shall probably have 200,000 miles. This is scarcely seems credible, but it may be, nevertheless, the trends of the road are adding continually goes on. The men immediately interested in the construction make money, and do not care a fig for the stockholders and the general public. Enterprise is often another name for downright swindling.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Educated Spiders.

The locust, who comes with his soft sighs in summer time and his "W" predicting wet, does now take back seat.

From a North Carolina contemporary we learn of a breed of educated spiders who are in the prophecy business, and who scorn the initial letters. When they have anything to communicate they write it out, and they don't misspell words, either.

One spider ran out a web, and then wrote across in bright, silvery letters, "War."

Another spun a web and began to write in embroidered across his silken home the word "Cotton." The boy who proceeded and finished the sentence, Indian—A War."

These educated spiders are bad-looking critters, in our sharge as a honeybee, have eight legs, and are winter bored show anger, shoot out their tongues, and swing their colows tacks as if they meant to jump and sting.

The educated spider should be suppressed. His literary labors can do no good. Besides that, the country has too many prophets already.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Foolish and Stubborn Boy.

In the efficacy of certain remedies of valued action, is the unsparing fetile of the ignorant and prejudiced. Prejudice sometimes does great injuries in a very common place of the falsity of such people, and, polypiles, diagnosed in sugar coating, castor oil, mercury, and other old-fashioned drugs, still hold their own among this class; and although the success of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is sufficiently disposed to the necessity for violence in medicine, the adherents of an exploded fallacy still persist in taking and taking inordinate quantities of the two crews escaping. The scow Hiem went to pieces off Muskegon, and her entire crew of seven men were drowned. The schooner Florida, with a crew of ten, went to pieces off Marquette. The crew was lost. A little boy accompanied the male sailors, who was caught between the rigging and the vessel and squeezed to death. The Dickenson and Emerald broke adrift from the tug Justice Field and went into the lake. Eight men and a little girl perished. Seven were lost, making a total of forty-one sailors who have lost their lives by the wrecking of vessels this season.

A Printer's Error.

Sweet are the uses of adversity, the printer's copy said, but he set it up, sweet are the uses of advertising. Sweet, indeed, to those who in sickness and suffering have seen the advertisement of some sovereign remedy, which they have thought them from death's door. "The best thing I ever saw is my proper Medical Discovery," said a grateful Victim of Dyspepsia, and again the testimony of 10,000 who have been cured by it of lung disease, scrofula, all chronic blood ulcers, liver complaints and the list to which Dean in her.

A MEDICAL WRITER says that children need more wraps than adults. They generally get more.

"Nip't in the Bud!"

Sad to say, many a good thing attains to nothing more than a fair beginning. On the other hand it is a matter for congratulation that the growth of some evil things may be greatly promptly frustrated. A large proportion of dispepsia cases are most well-marked and fatal of dispepsia—cases which have their inception in a slight, nothing and of Kidney Wort. It is a remedy which has cured thousands. Education of Chinese Princes.

The sons of the Manchu emperors (tu-ssu-pin) undergo from their tender youth a system of the strictest education. Rising about 3 o'clock in the morning, they first take their lesson in Chinese literature, under the superintendence of the ombi tutor who has the title of shifu, or "master." The tutor rises from his couch as soon as the imperial pupils enter, and receives from the latter a courtesy (ta-ch'ien), which is then returned in the same form. The tutor takes the seat of honor, and when the lesson is learned the pupil kneels up his book, deposits it before his teacher, and then returns to his seat to repeat the task by heart. If the lesson is not learned the tutor requests a smart lecture in attendance to bring the fords (k'o-tsu) pain), and makes a show of administering correction. But each imperial pupil is accompanied by eight fellow-students (pan-tu-ch'i) known in the Manchu language as kuk-a-ssu who study the same books as their young master. When it becomes necessary to admonish the latter more seriously the kuk-a-ssu are beaten with the fords vicariously; but when the imperial pupil acquits herself well they are, on the other hand, commended or rewarded. A recalcitrant and obstinate prince is at the last resort actually himself flogged, though probably only nominally, by the teacher, or taken before the emperor, who directs a eunuch to punch his cheeks (ch'ih pa-fen). The late Emperor T'ung-chih was frequently tweaked in this way by order of the empress. The Chinese lesson occupies two hours; after this comes the Manchu and Mongol lessons in composition, given by the teachers who enjoy the less honorable title of sifu, and who are obliged to meet their pupil at the door and make the first obeisance. Then come lessons in various spoken languages—Manchu, Mongol, Tangut—and in local Chinese dialects. After these come courses of instruction in foot and horse archery (tu-pu-ch'ien), athletics, hunting, putting the stone, etc., (kung-tu-ch'ih), under the guidance of a class of instructors called ssu-fu. The whole of the young princes' day is taken up with mental and physical exercises, and they retire to rest at a very early hour. At suitable intervals their meals are weighed out to them, and on no account are they allowed to indulge in the pleasures of the table. At the age of 16 they must marry. One year before a wife is selected for the heir apparent he is provided with a handmaid taken from the families of the inner bruners (tsu-ch'i) of the imperial household (tsu-ssu'ku), who must be one year elder than himself, and prepare him for a husband's duties. On his accession this handmaid (tsuo ispatsuko) receives the title of fei, which is given to her alone among those inmates of the harem who are selected from the inner bannners. No one but the empress is allowed to pass the night with the emperor. The emperor sleeps with eight handmaids (ch'ung-tsai) sitting upon his bed, and sixteen others (to-ying) underneath the bed, all of them girls from the ssu-ssu-fu. Their function is to watch over his majesty, and they are not allowed to sneeze, cough, spit, or utter any sound. The movements of the emperor after awaking in the morning are signalized by a clapping of hands on the part of the eunuch on guard. Once a year—on New Year's day—the emperor and empress preside at a grand banquet, the empress sitting on the emperor's left hand. This is the only occasion during the year on which the emperor can see his wives together and compare their respective merits. The empress presents wine to the fei (k'e-ch'in) to the eunuchs, who receive it from her majesty on their knees, and the emperor performs the same politeness to his women.—Hong Kong Daily Press.

Designs for Hanging Baskets.

The designs for hanging baskets offered by florists and wiremakers, and pottery and tile-makers, are very numerous and attractive. If selections are made from these, be certain to choose those large enough,—not less than twelve inches in diameter and six in depth. Fill the earth in even with the rim, and then let it rise in the center. If only one or two large plants are placed in the basket, it is well to moss over the surface with lycopodium or swamp moss, for this helps keep in the moisture and saves trouble in watering. The pretty wire baskets which look like bowls of green velvet when hung in the window, must be first lined with moss, then filled with soil, and lastly, planted. Good sized cuts should will hold sufficient earth to grow vines, and are among the most graceful window baskets. The edges must be bound for wires, cords or ribbons by which the shell is suspended. Light, rich soil should be packed into shells which look delightfully if nestled in the bloom-hanging bulbs. The rim of gourds and scallop-squashes make exceedingly pretty baskets for trailing plants. Cocoanut shells are useful and pleasing for holding mosses and ferneries. The ordinary kitchen wooden bowl can be converted into an attractive basket by boring a few gimlet holes in the bottom and sides. Take a bowl that is sixteen inches in diameter and make three holes at equal distances in the edge by which to suspend it with cords. The outside of the bowl may be embellished with lichens and wood mosses which can be applied with glue, brass wire or little brads. Plant such a basket with bright green money wort, with the different varieties of tradescantia and soft bending grasses, and it is truly a thing of beauty."—Mrs. Fannie A. Benson, in Good Housekeeping.

Mrs. Julia Smith, of Glastonbury, Conn., recently deceased, bequeathed the famous Jersey cows to her husband, but of her other personal property she gave to Mrs. Jane H. Shepherd of the Boston Home, Washington, "my silk bedquilt containing 7,500 pieces, to Mrs. James Noble of Westfield, Mass., the whole quilt to be a resting-on without a seam, spun by myself and sister, and the 12th yearsend bed-quilt of dimity made by my grandmother before her marriage, was spun and woven the lining and quilted in seam."

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. I had been a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have bone scraped or her amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters is sold at 50 cts. a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25 cents box by Dr. G. W. Crouter. 5

Eveline.

Rain all day Sunday.

More snow Monday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle have been on the sick list for a few days.

The rains and springlike weather has so rotted the ice in South Arm as to make it unsafe to cross, and much of it near the ferry has disappeared, so that passage is made by boat again.

Another old settler gone. Mr. Robert Bedwin, who has resided in Eveline for twenty years, died at his home on Tuesday night, Dec. 7th, after a long illness of paralysis, at the age of 69 years, 9 months and 15 days. He was born at Milton, Berkshire, England, on February 22, 1817, and at the age of twenty-one he with his parents came to this country and settled in Middlegen, N. Y., where he lived for five years, after which he moved to Oberlin, Ohio, where he followed the tailoring trade. In 1833 he was married to Miss Elisabeth Cater of that place. And he with his wife and two sons, Charlie and Eugene Bedwin, moved to Eveline where he settled on their present homestead opposite Ironton. He suffered the usual hardships of a pioneer's life, but by dint of hard toil and hard labor he succeeded in clearing up a farm. In those days the nearest point from which provisions could be obtained was Charlevoix, and there being but few teams in the country and no steamboats, much of the supplies had to be lugged on foot, or by a team. In 1882 he set up a dry goods and grocery store on his place in which he did a lively business for nearly four years. He secured the establishment of the Bedwin postoffice, but after he closed his store the postoffice has been practically discontinued. Mr. Bedwin was our township clerk for nine years. He was very mild and did not complain through all his illness. The funeral occurred from the house on Thursday morning at 10:30; Rev. B. H. Whitman, of Norwood, officiating, and the remains were laid to rest in the Advance cemetery. The deceased leaves a wife and three sons and a large number of friends to mourn his loss, and the bereaved family have the sympathy of all. Mr. and Mrs. Bedwin have buried four sons. Mr. Bedwin's spiritual faith was strong to the end.

Clarion.

The infant son of Perry and Edith Nichols died on Saturday, Dec. 5th, age 9 weeks.

A lecture on Wednesday evening by the Rev. Mr. Burnston, of Boyne Falls, at the Odd Fellows' hall.

A temperance lecture Friday evening at the school house by the Rev. John R. Robinson.

Mr. John Williams had a horse killed last Monday morning.

School closes next week Friday with an entertainment.

Ed. Darrah is filling the railroad limits with timbers that are "longer than a moral law."

There is considerable excitement over a wild animal that is at large; what it is no one knows, but Fort Lord says it's got the "terriblest holler" that he ever heard.

There is a prospect of Clarion having two churches next spring.—an Evangelical and a Methodist.

Dec. 8, 1886.

Burgess.

J. A. Bacott, our supervisor, has completed the tax roll and placed it in the hands of the town treasurer.

Mr. Minier has been getting him a team of horses.

Joseph Lewis, Jr., is the happy man; it is a little girl.

Moses Cooper has commenced his winter's work getting out logs, and is soon going to commence at a big contract that he has for ties and posts.

Most every body is busy at the log business, and it is a good time for cutting and skidding.

Mr. Crop, who has been living near Cagachewing is talking of moving his family to Charlevoix for the winter.

E. H. Burgess has a portable sawmill and engine that he is going to run this winter, at his camp, sawing ties and posts.

A. R. Struthers is getting out furnace wood for the Iron Company.

Dec. 14.

Ellsworth.

On Dec. 11th, after months of suffering, Andrew Benur, one of our oldest citizens, also one of the first settlers of Banks township, died aged seventy-nine years, leaving his aged wife to mourn his loss. He was buried at Central Lake on the 13th; many of his neighbors following his remains to their last resting place.

H. Clugg met with a slight accident at the mill, which causes him to wear a patch of court plaster under his right eye.

L. Doline and wife went to Boyne City last Wednesday on business.

Frank Wrisley of Charlevoix is up here at work.

Ideal Women.

The women of fiction form, perhaps, the most delightful ideal possession of the civilized races of the world. Invention, based upon imitation, has produced so and lovely images of the fairest and sweetest creatures that make the earth divine. To few men it is given to know and meet in actual life women who rise to the altitude of worth and charm of the women of the poets, and it is pre-eminently the happy task of the poet to embody for us, in suggestions of deathless loveliness, beings who answer to the highest conceptions that man can form of beauty, of tenderness, of purity and of nobleness. In the magic mirror of the poet's imagination are fixed to permanence the images of the fairest and dearest of God's feminine creatures. He who, professing a high ideal of womanhood can yet never find an ideal love in his imagination, is to be wedded to Imogen or Di Vernon. The poet's creed, that "woman the crown of the world," Shakspeare, is the greatest creator of ideal women. The true ideal is always t'ent upon the world. Shakspeare's women are so ideal because he has placed them upon the loftiest of abstract truth. His women are ideal, not because womanhood is, as it is best, what it is. Imogen, Desdemona, Ophelia, Portia are loftiest creatures, and yet are the most natural men. Another mighty poet has given us Gretchen and Charlotte, women who in such limited space as we can have command, can enumerate or even allude to all the fair women painted by noble poets. The large and lovely constellation of sweet, good women, shining filed away. Its fadeless and enormous, and a begging letter from an unknown person was as promptly answered and as carefully as one from a cabinet minister. He was most punctilious about returning subscriptions, so no matter who he was, ever saluted the General without getting a salute in return. On pleasant days he was fond of walking about Governor's Island and personally inspecting the work going on there. If in his walk he met a party of strangers he saluted him he would respond by courteously lifting his hat, and would frequently add: "Glad to see you on the island." —N. Y. Tribune.

Advice to Country Girls.

City life is not all that it is painted. It has its pleasures and conveniences, but it also has its serious drawbacks. Before taking the plunge into life in the city country girls should ask themselves what is really to be gained by it. If they think that their great ambition some stray advertisement has reached them, promising to young women high salaries for light work. Hundreds of such advertisements are framed for the very purpose of deceiving the unwary. They accomplish their purpose, however, and a great number of young girls rush up to the city, dazzled by the generous profusion of promises.

A girl from the farm answers one of these advertisements. Life may have been slow at home, but there was always good food and in plenty, and there is some one to care for in the old farm house. When she goes to the big city she finds that the "light work" consists in working all day in a badly lighted and ill-smelling workshop, where scores of other girls and women are employed at wages barely sufficient to keep body and soul together.

We know what often comes next. The girl has left home; she is ashamed or unwilling to return, and she must take the consequences, oftimes one of two things—shame or suffering. Many a girl sinks first in the frivolities and next in the iniquity of the streets that excitement by which regrets and remorse may be deadened. If she is too strong in principle, too pure and elevated in tone thus to sink down to one of the pitiable women of the street, she may find herself in some cold garret, lonely, overworked, despondent and miserable.

Better remain at home than risk the failure which attends so many girls who go to the city in pursuit of high pay for light work. It is the saddest of all ventures, forsaking a country home for the illusions and deceptions of a large town.—Reading (Pa.) Times.

Some Feminine Writers.

A great many people have followed the career of Miss Maud Howe with close interest. Probably she does not realize herself how much she is talked about. Her efforts in prose have been welcomed. It is not claimed, I think, that she is a great genius even by her friends, but much is expected of her. Her mother, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and her late uncle, genial old Sam Ward, both talked of her constantly when they were in York. Her engagement to every painter of note is regularly announced through the season. Still she does not marry. She is a woman of classic beauty. The daughter of the late Mrs Ann S. Stephens is similar in some respects to Miss Howe. Of the other women among American writers there does not seem at present to be any stalwart figure. I fancy that a dim and insidious suspicion is beginning to enter the mind of the average novel reader that Miss Murfree (Charles Egbert Craddock) is a bit overrated. Great talk was created by the theatrical revelation of the identity of Charles Egbert Craddock, when three eminent Boston writers—Dr. Holmes among them—were asked to meet the author of the "Great Smoky Mountain," and found, instead of a man, a straight-browed, erect, and rather handsome girl. As for Mrs. Burnett—who has married money—she seems to have faded out of sight, but we have the Duchess and Bertha M. Clay always with us, so why should America complain? I haven't said anything about Miss Cleveland on account of her brother. If she writes another novel he is lost. I have never yet recovered from that thrilling love scene in her book where the lover looks half at the heroine for a moment, and then says passionately: "Do you love me?" The heroine says firmly: "I do." "Then," replies the hero, "good evening." —Brooklyn Eagle.

Have Had Their Share.

"When Ben Hill, Jr., came here last year as a candidate for the United States District Attorneyship of Northern Georgia, says a Washington writer in the Philadelphia Record, "he called on Senator Joe Brown of Georgia and asked him for his support. Thereupon it is recorded that Ole Joe assumed his judicial attitude, softly caressed one hand with the other, stroked his long white beard, drew its two longest white hairs through his knotty fingers, and said: "Well, now, Mr. Hill, to be frank with you, and I always like to be frank with gentlemen, I think that the Hill family has had its share of the Georgia offices. Your father was a United States Senator, you have been Solicitor General of the Atlanta Circuit for seven years, you have got your brother into that, and now you want the District Attorneyship at $6,000 a year. I would not feel justified in aiding you, for I think your family has had all it deserves from the State of Georgia." Nevertheless, Hill was appointed District Attorney for the Northern District of Georgia. Now there is a vacancy in the District Judgeship of this same Northern District, and Joe Brown's brother Jim is a candidate for it. Ben Hill, Jr., has been here this week to see that another man gets it. He said the other day that he had some idea of going to see Ole Joe and saying to him: "To be perfectly frank with you, Senator, and I always like to be frank with gentlemen, I think the Brown family has had its share of the Georgia offices. You have been Governor and are United States Senator; your brother has been a State Judge; your son is a manager of the State railroad; and the rest of your family are equally well provided for. I would not feel justified in supporting your brother Jim for the District Judgeship, for I think the Brown family has had all it deserves from the State of Georgia."

A cherry tree stood in the way of a German railway extension that is being pushed at Nieder-Salmstein, and the owner asked about 600 francs for the tree. Experts were appointed and he then showed that it had for years yielded him crops each of which sold for sums equivalent to the interest on the amount named. They finally agreed to award him $600, and the tree had to go.

"The Old Oaken Bucket."

According to the Hartford Courant, the familiar poem, "The Old Oaken Bucket," was written by Samuel Woodworth in 1819, just after he had drunk water from a bucket at a well in Cromwell, Conn., which was on the premises of the late Captain James Riley. The poet was then teaching a district school on Prospect Hill, in that town.—Exchange.

Such is not our understanding of the origin of the poem spoken of. When a lad, living in New York, we knew Woodworth well, and he was the first person we ever saw "at the case," setting type. He was a man of fine intellectual attainments, a comely writer, poetry being his forte. But, like many another brilliant intellect, he was cursed with an irrepressible thirst for liquor. We have always understood the history of his writing "The Old Oaken Bucket" to be this, and our impression is formed from early recollections and information:

Woodworth at the time worked in a printing office (where we know him) in the Bowery, near Pump, now Canal street. A friend and neighbor from his old home in the east had called on him, and together they repaired to a neighboring tavern, where they imbibed pretty freely. Taking an uncapped glass in his hand, Woodworth extolled the excellence of the liquor, saying it was the best drink of which he had ever partaken.

"No, Sam," said his companion, "I think I can call your attention to a drink that far surpassed this. It was the pure, refreshing crystal water that you and I used to drink from the old oaken bucket that hung in your father's well."

The reference to his old Massachusetts home and its surroundings, recalling the days of his freedom from drink, completely broke him down. He at once left the place, and returning to the printing office, seated himself at a table from which he did not rise till the poem that has become so celebrated was completed.—Norwood Irvine, in Delsware Express.

Gen. Hancock's Poor Memory.

An intimate friend of Gen. Hancock, in speaking of the dead General's personal peculiarities, said: "In most things the General was the soul of exactness, but in money matters he was hopelessly thoughtless. He would frequently come over to see city without a cent in his pocket. On discovering his impecunious condition a look of helpless surprise would come over his face, and winking his eyes in that peculiar manner usual with him when he was puzzled, he would say: 'Well, I declare! I haven't got a cent. Will you lend me some money?' Of course, the pocket-book of every one was open to the General, but he would borrow just a quarter or at most half a dollar, and go off up-town as happy as a cricket-boy. He never gave the loose change in his pocket to beggars or organ-grinders, and was lucky if he saved enough to get him down town again. One day he climbed up the stairs of the Sun office, and, with a pleasant smile, and began to fumble in his pockets for money. Five-cents was all he could find, and after winking at the naked sum he commanded the editor to come down and took the Broadway horse-car for Bowling Green.

"On coming to letters and papers, however, the General was wonderfully exact. He always kept every letter he received and had them answered and carefully filed away. Its fadeless and enormous, and a begging letter from an unknown person was as promptly answered and as carefully as one from a cabinet minister. He was most punctilious about returning subscriptions, so no matter who he was, ever saluted the General without getting a salute in return. On pleasant days he was fond of walking about Governor's Island and personally inspecting the work going on there. If in his walk he met a party of strangers he saluted him he would respond by courteously lifting his hat, and would frequently add: 'Glad to see you on the island.' "—N. Y. Tribune.

Gloss for Cigars.

"An interesting feature of the trade," said a dealer, "is a process for giving to cigars a very rich glossy and shiny appearance. No matter how dead looking a cigar may be, the process makes them look as though they were made from the richest, oiliest, finest, gummy tobacco, and no matter how old and tired out the cigars may be the process renews their youthful appearance. The process is a secret. The material used is as dear as cream, but it gives to a cigar a much darker and richer appearance. It can not come off on the hands, cigar, has no taste, and does not become soiled by age. The material costs $5 a gallon. The fact is that people are continually demanding cigars of better quality, and the only way to keep up with the times is for manufacturers to improve their tobacco to the fullest extent. The way to do it is to throw aside all prejudice and old fashioned notions. The looks of cigars sell them, and if the wrappers are dark and shiny they will every time take. I know by experience."—New York Mail and Express.

Concise Record of the Week.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

The galleries of the Senate Chamber were filled with spectators when, at 12 noon on Monday, Dec. 6, the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress was opened. The presiding officer, Senator Ferry, of Michigan, swept the usual oral form of the senatorial oath to a bench of departmental, which were ordered during the last hour of sitting at noon; informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed to business, and for the appointment of a committee to wait on the President, for the usual purpose. Messrs. Morrill and Beck were appointed such committee. The credentials of Senator Williams, of Illinois, were presented and the oath of office was administered to him. Several bills were introduced, and the usual resolution, which the President's message was received and read, directing copies thereof to be printed, was adopted. The House was called to order precisely at noon, Speaker Randall presiding in their venue. On motion of Mr. Cox, of New York, a committee was appointed to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might desire to make. Messrs. Wright, Speakership of Kentucky, and Hiscock were appointed as such committee. At 12:40 the Speaker pro tem. announced the committee appointed to wait upon the President, and Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, stated that the President had performed his duty, and that the President would communicate with the House in writing. Mr. Pendleton's announcement was then announced, and, pending the action of the House on the President's annual message, it was immediately read by the Clerk, heavily affected by the House and Senate.

Among the new bills presented in the Senate on the 7th inst. was one by Mr. Van Wyck to exempt from duty imported sugar and molasses, and also imported bonds, lumber, and timber. Senator Beck introduced a bill to provide for the issue of silver certificates against silver bullion and national bank notes of small denomination, and for the issue of such bullion and certificates. Bills introduced to prevent the monopoly of the pension laws (4). To increase the pension for loss of an eye to $30 per month; for loss of one half of sight to a proportionate amount; for the issue of pensions for loss of one hand or foot, or for total disability of the same, to $45 per month; for loss of an arm within two inches of or above the elbow joint, or loss of a leg within six inches of the knee joint, to $40 per month; for loss of the sense of either organ, and for loss of an arm within six inches of the shoulder joint to $45 per month. Senators Morrill and Jones each introduced resolutions looking toward a reduction of the revenue. The House of Representatives passed a bill appropriating $600,000 for a civil and military monument at Fort Ridley, and $47,000 for the relief of Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant. Mr. Cox, of New York, introduced a resolution to repeal the statute which authorizes the issue, and at a compromise rate of interest,

"The way to re-elect Cleveland: Reduce the taxes."—N. Y. Star.

The Ingham County Democrat was last week enlarged from five to six columns to a page, eight pages. We are pleased to note Bro. Whitmore's apparent prosperity.

By rapid payments of the three per cent bonds the treasury surplus has been reduced to a monthly balance of little more than $35,000,000. The Morrison tariff bill, now on the files of congress, would extinguish this needless treasury surplus and at the same time relieve the people of a far greater amount of taxation which brings no revenue to the Treasury. —New York World.

The postal receipts in Michigan for the last fiscal year were $1,448,807.93 The total expenses, $1,458,383.60 During the year 63 new post-offices were established, and 19 discontinued; the names or sites of 24 were changed. The state has 102 presidential offices, the salaries attached thereto aggregating $167,400. Free delivery is self-sustaining in Detroit, where there are 52 carriers. Bay City has six carriers, East Saginaw nine, Grand Rapids seventeen, Kalamazoo six.

The Petoskey Democrat has been nearly doubled in size, and is now an eight page paper of seven columns to a page. We think, however, a mistake was made by leaving the subscription price at one dollar. In this northern country where circulation is necessary limited, we do not believe it possible to successfully compete with city papers in both size and price, without a great sacrifice of quality. We wish the publisher all the success he anticipates from his enlargement.

Has the public debt been reduced? In 1865 18,000,000 bales of cotton would have paid it. Now it will take 35,000,000 bales. In 1865 25,000,000 tons of iron would have paid it. Now it would take 35,000,000 tons. In 1865 880,000,000 bushels of wheat would have paid the whole war debt. Now it would take 1,200,000,000 bushels to pay what remains due. The government does not owe as many dollars as it did in 1865, but those it does owe are twice and a half more valuable. All this is the result of currency contraction to the gold standard.—Cheboygan News.

A member of the house committee on postoffices and post roads is authority for the statement that there will be no further reduction in letter postage for several years to come. Said he: "We are just now recovering from the effects of the reduction from three to two cents, and congress will wait until that effect entirely disappears. The government suffers very little now from the late reduction, and within three or four years postal receipts will be as large as when it cost three cents to send a letter through the mails, and the moment that point is reached congress will probably begin taking steps to bring about a penny postage."

Abolish the Sugar Tax.

If the president shall recommend the abolition of the tariff on sugar, and the republican senators shall follow Mr. Sherman in favoring the same idea, it is not unlikely that $50,000,000 of the surplus will be cut off at a single stroke. This would not be an ideal adjustment of the revenue difficulty, but statesmanship is often compelled to accept the best practical settlement of difficulties. There is no other tax so universally felt as is that upon sugar. It enhances the cost of an article consumed in some form by every man, woman, and child in the country.—New York World.

Michigan State Weather Service.

N. B. Conger, Sergeant signal corps has been detailed by the chief signal officer of the army to organize a Michigan state weather service, to co-operate with the government weather bureau.

Gen. Hazen says: "The object of a state weather service should be to observe and utilize every feature of the weather that affects the prosperity of the inhabitants of the state, as to crops, health, life, etc., omitting, perhaps, only those few items already provided for by the general government at Washington, such as general storm predictions. The state service is, therefore essentially a plan for gathering and utilizing local climatic data, and eventually it will define precisely the localities most favorable or unfavorable to special crops, diseases, etc."

The plan of the state service is to have a central office, and a state director, and at least one voluntary observer in each county, who will keep a record of temperature and precipitation and report the same to the central office monthly. Observers wishing to make continuous records of wind force, humidity and of the barometer, will be aided in all possible ways, both by the state and government service, for such observations are locally of equal value to those of temperature and precipitation.

The state director will supply, from the chief signal office at Washington, the instruments necessary for all the observations spoken of above at greatly reduced cost from catalogue prices. The instruments will be compared with the government standard at the chief signal office and a memorandum of error of each will be furnished with each instrument. The central office will also furnish free of charge to all local stations, the necessary blanks, instructions, monthly weather review, containing reports of various state weather services, and all other useful information communicated by the chief signal officer.

To take the observations requires but little time daily, and the exercise is especially agreeable to those interested in natural science. Several states are already entered on the work with the most gratifying results. The complete success which is anticipated will only come when each state does its part, and it should not be said of Michigan that we will neglect a matter of so much importance to the entire community, especially the agricultural interests.

Two hundred and fifty volunteers are needed throughout the state for this work. For further information address N. B. Conger, sergeant signal corps, U. S. A. signal office, Lansing, Michigan.

The late Dean Stanley was a playmate of Mr. Gladstone's at the age of 10 or 12. One day the future premier, then 10 years old, asked him if he had ever read Gray's poems. "No," replied Stanley. "Then go so at once," said Gladstone, vaseemently, and produced the volumes. It was taken home, read, and relished.

John Burns returned Monday night from Colorado.

The Smithson Lumber Co. now employ over sixty men.

Capt. Tullock has added a kitchen to his residence on Clinton street.

The schooner Fleetwing was the last arrival of the Charlevoix fleet.

R. W. Kane returned home Monday night from his trip to Baltimore.

Rain last Saturday and Sunday. Snow and sleighing again on Tuesday.

The Traverse Herald issued an eight-page Christmas edition last week.

A teacher's meeting for the M. E. Sunday school was held at the parsonage, Tuesday.

Water at Petoskey is the name of the new firm now conducting the Boyne City mill.

Hugh Miller, of Bay Springs, has been appointed deputy sheriff by sheriff-elect Jerrue.

Burns & Scroggie are running a tri-weekly freight line between Charlevoix and Petoskey.

C. Y. Cook returns to friends in Charlevoix that he is perfectly delighted with Florida.

Mancelona is about to organize a business men's association similar to that at East Jordan.

The steady increase in the number of our subscribers is proof of the growing popularity of the JOURNAL.

It is stated that P. A. Badour, formerly of the Boyne Statesman, has gone to Crystal Falls, Iron county, to start a paper.

It is unofficially reported that Will Scroggie, of the firm of Burns & Scroggie, is to be deputy sheriff for Charlevoix.

J. Neil Brothers returned last Friday with the tug Minnie Warren, from fishing in Grand Traverse bay. They report fair success.

Rev. Mr. Waterman attends the Cheboygan Congregational conference this week at Kalamazoo. Rev. J. J. Kanagy is the delegate from Charlevoix.

Miss May Waterbury, teacher of the first primary department Charlevoix public school, starts for her home in Ionia, this week, to be absent during the holidays.

Preaching by Rev. J. T. Iddings next Sunday afternoon at Blake's school house, at 2.30 o'clock, and at the schools for the benefit of the organ fund. To mention each subscription in detail would require more time than we can use this morning. It is easy to see, however, that most of the pupils have made a gratifying improvement during the past year, in readings, recitations, and deportment. There seemed to be a greater ease of action and speech, and less embarrassment than on the last occasion, indicating correct methods of training on the part of principal and teachers. We are sorry that we cannot mention the program in detail this week.

The carpenters and painters are applying the finishing touches to Amos Fox's new residence on Main street, mentioned from time to time in these columns. The full effects of outward beauty cannot be determined until the coat of color is applied in the spring, but with the many gables, verandas, ornaments, etc., it cannot fail to be very handsome. Inside, the rooms are large, light, and convenient. To the left of the entrance is the double parlor, each room 15x15, with a mammoth bay window in front and large double windows on the west side. East of the back parlor is the dining room, 15x15, with a bay window on the east, and a door opening on the veranda. North of the dining room is the kitchen, 10x20, with a large, well-finished china cupboard, between. To the west of the kitchen is also a large and well furnished pantry. The parlor bed-room may be reached from the kitchen as well as the back parlor. A large window opens on the broad veranda along part of the west side. These rooms, as well as the hall and circular stairway, are finished in hardwood. In the chamber are three large rooms to correspond in size and style of finish to the double parlor and dining room below, the balance being divided into fair sized bed rooms, and a bath room, all complete with closets, etc. This floor is finished in pine, natural color. The basement is large enough to hold a year's supply of wood, besides a commodious fruit and vegetable cellar. The house is to be heated by a furnace. The plans were drawn by J. T. Kirkpatrick, the contract for joiner work let to O. I. Wheat, the Charlevoix Mfg. Co. furnished the wood-work, C. B. Glass did the stone work and plastering, and Swallow and Hemmings the painting. L. D. Bartholomew & Co. furnished the hardware and furnace. The house is an ornament to Main street, and a monument to the enterprise and mechanical skill of Charlevoix. Mr. and Mrs. Fox will have reason to be proud of their new home.

Historical Society.

The meeting of the Historical Society at Mr. E. M. Clark's was one of much interest, and the usual number were present, notwithstanding the rainy weather. The main feature of the entertainment was an address by Rev. W. H. McCartney, on Russia and the Eastern Question. It was not an encyclopedic address but was replete with bright prophecies for the future of Russia, and the Slavonic race in general.

Other numbers of the program were organ solos by Miss Lura Washburn and Mrs. Ella Smith, select readings by Fred Green and Alice Cochran, and a vocal trio and a quartette by Mrs. Hines, Mrs. Clark, W. A. Smith and Dr. Carlstein.

The Society will meet with W. A. Smith on next Friday evening, when Mr. W. P. Brown will address the society, on Ireland. There will also be a select reading by Miss Gage, and vocal and instrumental music.

How to be Happy.

The live advertiser is always the live dealer, and always gives the best bargains. Keep this in mind when you buy your holiday goods. In consulting the columns of the JOURNAL you will find that Dr. Geo. W. Crouter takes the lead this year, as in previous years. In his stock will be found almost everything one could ask for from the cheapest toys to the finest plush mirrors, art books, albums, Christmas and New Year cards, etc. His show cases and shelves are full of goods of beauty and of value, and a good size stock is held in reserve for lack of show room. Consult his advertisement on eighth page for details, and go and look over the stock before you buy.

The legislature couldn't make any better investment of its time this winter than by devoting some of it to an effort to reduce railroad fares in Michigan to two cents per mile. With a population of 2,000,000, railroad fares are as high as when the state had only 400,000.—Cheboygan News.

A dispatch to the Telegram-Herald under date of December 6th says: The tug Williams, of Manistee, has been working since yesterday morning on the schooner Metropolis ashore near Old Mission Point. A diver reports her in bad condition and it is thought she must be abandoned."

The steamer Lou A. Cummings, after a very prosperous season on the bay, has gone to Grand Haven to winter. It is quite probable she will be in different hands next season, as Captain Robertson expects to sail the steam barge now building for Gill & Son.—Traverse Herald.

An exchange says that "Chestnuts" and "Hats" have had their day, and are now considered obsolete in literary circles. A new exclamation has come prominently into public notice, and hereafter when your friend tells you a fishy story or repeats a story off cold, the proper thing to say is "Wiggins," with the accent on the "Wig."

Upper peninsular sportsmen are indignant at the amount of pot-hunting being carried on. Two hunters in 90 days killed 284 deer, most of which were shipped out of the state. The legislature will be asked to make further protection for enforcing the present laws or make others more stringent. Complaint is made that brook trout is also shipped out of the state by the ton.—Cheboygan News.

C. R. Bellinger has more than doubled his stock of silver ware and jewelry for the holiday season as compared with one year ago. Among other things he has put in a case of cheap plated ware, that he can sell for half the prices of the grade of goods offered last year. He has also added to the better grades a lot of new patterns and styles. He has also a new stock of American watches, which he can sell cheap.

The Scientific American, published by Munn & Co., New York, during forty years, is, beyond all question, the leading paper relating to science, mechanics and invention published on this continent. Each weekly issue presents the latest scientific topics in an interesting and reliable manner, accompanied with engravings prepared expressly to demonstrate the subjects. The Scientific American is invaluable to every person desiring to keep pace with the inventions and discoveries of the day.

Notwithstanding the severe storm last evening, the opera house was packed with an eager audience to witness the second annual entertainment by the teachers and children of the schools for the benefit of the organ fund. To mention each subscription in detail would require more time than we can use this morning. It is easy to see, however, that most of the pupils have made a gratifying improvement during the past year, in readings, recitations, and deportment. Queen Victoria is not partial to journalists as a class. But her determination to exclude anything in the shape of a newspaper representative from the recent circus performance at Windsor Castle was frustrated by one enterprising journalist, who dressed himself up as a groom and held up paper hoops for the equestrienne to jump through. This dumbless individual had a narrow escape, for his very literary-looking spectacles did not favor the impression that he was a circus-groom and were the subject of royal suspicion and remark.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practice enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world mark a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says "That has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial! It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed, and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

A Magnificent Holiday Number.

The grand annual number of the Graphic News, of Cincinnati, will be out the 15th inst. and will be the finest holiday edition ever published in this country. It will contain sixty pages of original pictures by America's greatest artists, with two beautifully colored supplements and stories by Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, Ogle P. Read, of the Arkansaw Traveler, Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, and other noted writers. Be sure and get it. The new serial of the Graphic News, "The Tompkins Mystery," began with the issue of the 11th inst. It promises to be highly interesting, and this attraction with the fact that every new subscriber gets one of the grand Christmas numbers, should encourage all to subscribe.

The Necessity for Coast Defenses Explained and Urged Upon Congress.

A Proposition to Establish National Prisons for Federal Convicts.

To the Congress of the United States:

In the discharge of a constitutional duty, and following a well-established precedent in the Executive office, I herewith transmit to Congress, with the exceptions noted, information concerning the state of the Union, together with such recommendations for legislation and information as appear necessary and expedient.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The Government has consistently maintained its relations of friendship toward all other nations, and has generally interred toward those whose government exchanges to our own. Few questions have arisen to disturb our intercourse with other Governments, and none of these are beyond the reach of settlement in a friendly manner.

CLAIMS AGAINST CHILE.

We are a signatory of a treaty for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States against Chili for injuries during the late war with Peru and Chili. The Peru and Chilean mission, organized under claims conventions, concluded their labors within the time fixed, and European states, have developed no amount of friction which we trust can be avoided by the convention which our representative at Santiago is authorized to negotiate.

CHINESE QUESTION.

The cruel treatment of inoffensive Chinese has, I regret to say, continued to disgrace some of our Western States and Territories, and acts of violence against these people beyond the power of the local constituted authorities to prevent and difficult to punish, are reported from several quarters. While these outrages can be traced to race prejudice and competition of labor, which cannot, however, justify the suspension of a treaty whose outcry is guaranteed by our treaty with China equally with the most favored nation, and which our laws have made, even subsistence, the occasion for such violence, we have to invite assumptions and not to repeat an appeal for earnest authoritative and paramount duty of maintaining public peace and of defending the interests of those intrusted with a temporary sojourn, after the termination of a treaty which has invited the expansion of the business of a friendly power, I can not without assurance that the Government of China will view friendly this position toward us I am most happy to recognize the disposition of the Chinese Government to protect, as far as lies within its power, the cessation of Chinese emigration, joined to the further of those Chinese subjects who remain in this country, may be secured. Legislation to this effect has been recommended by the Executive of our Government, and the conclusion of our Chinese treaty.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

While the good will of the Celestial Government toward our country is manifest, the action of American citizens in the Hawaiian Islands, Samoa, and Tonga has at times disturbed the harmony of our intercourse, leading to the performance of the sad duties of two nations concerning the territory subjected in the Hawaiian Islands. With the subsidence of the Hawaiian disturbances and the withdrawal of the Commissioner, who had visited under the direct government of the constitutional administration, at Honolulu, a report of things has been unsatisfactory which although as yet somewhat experimental and affecting the rights of many citizens of power by the delegates of the national authority, promises much improvement.

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

The sympathy between the people of the United States and France, both during the national struggle for independence, and considering the assistance which France gave in the successful competition and defeated of the colonial status of Liberty Enlightening the World, in New York harbor, the gift of Frenchmen to Americans.

FISHERIES AND COASTING CARGOES.

A convention between the United States and certain other powers for the protection of all marine cables was signed at Paris on March 14, 1884, and has been duly ratified and proclaimed by the Government. By agreement between the contracting parties, this convention is to take effect on the first of January next, but the signature of the requisite number of ratifications in the United States has not yet been adopted. I earnestly recommend its enactment.

NATURALIZED GERMANS ABROAD.

Cases have continued to occur in Germany giving rise to complaints of the treatment of naturalized Germans of origin revisiting the country their birth, yet I am happy to state that our relations with that country have lost none of their accustomed cordiality.

DIAMOND FIELDS.

The claims for interest upon the amount of Bering Sea sealing vessels from certain German steamship lines were favorably received by the Congress of the last session, and, I trust, will receive final and favorable attention at an early date.

THE FISHERY TROUBLES.

The recommendation contained in my last annual message in relation to a mode of settlement of the fishery rights in the waters of British North America, so long a subject of anxious difference between the United States and Great Britain, has, in the absence of any adverse vote of the Senate thereon, been carried. Thereupon negotiations were instituted looking to the adjustment of the Dominion Marquis of Lorne, commissioner for the negotiation of such joint interpretation and consideration of the provisions of the convention of 1818, relating to the territorial waters and inshore fisheries of the British Dominions, and to the grant by the Dominion of certain privileges by the United States fishermen, and, at the same time, means for the enjoyment by the latter of the privileges guaranteed to them by such convention.

The question involved are of long standing, of grave consequence, and of a character which has caused the expenditure of a century have given rise to earnest international discussion, and have caused the United States and Great Britain, governments treaties have served to allay friction, which, however, has revived as each new difficulty has arisen.

The treaty agreement, under the treaty of 1818, of the United States, on June 30, 1885, for I was enabled to obtain the concurrence of the Senate, in the exercise of the privileges accorded by the Dominion, The Joint Commission by which the treaty had been negotiated, although invested with plenary powers, failed to reach a satisfactory settlement, and with the temporary arrangement, after the termination of the treaty, which was provided for in the stipulations of the treaty of 1818, as to the first article of controversy, has been agreed upon. The negotiations for a permanent settlement of the question are continuing, and the conclusion of a satisfactory arrangement is hoped for.

The treaty provides, generally, a concession of areas of exclusive fishery, and the enjoyment of the privileges of the inshore fisheries in waters not within such exclusive jurisdiction. Modes of determining the exclusive waters have been agreed upon, and multiplied; the methods of conducting the fishery are specified, and the rights and privileges to be enjoyed in port and for trade, and the duties and liabilities of the fishermen, are defined. The treaty also provides for the free exchange of products of the sea between the United States and their Canadian neighbors, and, in the interest of commerce between the United States and their neighbors, provides for the free transit in bond across the Canadian territory of goods, wares, and merchandise, subject to such regulations as may be established by the Government of the Dominion, to secure the proper collection of the revenues of the United States, and to prevent the introduction of goods into the United States by means of the transit thus allowed, which, although unobjectionable in themselves, may be of such character as to render their introduction into the United States, under ordinary circumstances, a fraud upon our revenue.

The provisions of the treaty, in regard to the fishery rights, are, in my opinion, all that could be reasonably expected, and I trust that the history of the negotiations will satisfy the Congress and the people of the United States that the Government has spared no effort to secure the rights and privileges which our citizens have long enjoyed in the waters of the British Dominions, so long a subject of anxious difference between the United States and Great Britain, and which, in the absence of any adverse vote of the Senate, I had hoped, and still hope, negotiations were instituted to secure, by the concession of the Dominion Government, the enjoyment of such joint interpretation and consideration of the provisions of the convention of 1818, relating to the territorial waters and inshore fisheries of the British Dominions, as would secure the enjoyment of the privileges guaranteed by the United States fishermen, and, at the same time, insure the enjoyment by the latter of the privileges guaranteed to them by such convention.

The question involved are of long standing, of grave consequence, and of a character which for nearly three-quarters of a century have given rise to earnest international discussion, and have caused the United States and Great Britain, governments treaties have served to allay friction, which, however, has revived as each lively has occasion.

The treaty agreement, under the treaty of 1818, of the United States, on June 30, 1885, for I was enabled to obtain the concurrence of the Senate, in the exercise of the privileges accorded by the Dominion. The Joint Commission by which the treaty had been negotiated, although invested with plenary powers, failed to reach a satisfactory settlement, and with the temporary arrangement, after the termination of the treaty, which was provided for in the stipulations of the treaty of 1818, as to the first article of controversy, has been agreed upon. The negotiations for a permanent settlement of the question are continuing, and the conclusion of a satisfactory arrangement is hoped for.

The treaty provides, generally, a concession of areas of exclusive fishery, and the enjoyment of the privileges of the inshore fisheries in waters not within such exclusive jurisdiction. Modes of determining the exclusive waters have been agreed upon, and multiplied; the methods of conducting the fishery are specified, and the rights and privileges to be enjoyed in port and for trade, and the duties and liabilities of the fishermen, are defined. The treaty also provides for the free exchange of products of the sea between the United States and their Canadian neighbors, and, in the interest of commerce between the United States and their neighbors, provides for the free transit in bond across the Canadian territory of goods, wares, and merchandise, subject to such regulations as may be established by the Government of the Dominion, to secure the proper collection of the revenues of the United States, and to prevent the introduction of goods into the United States by means of the transit thus allowed, which, although unobjectionable in themselves, may be of such character as to render their introduction into the United States, under ordinary circumstances, a fraud upon our revenue.

The provisions of the treaty, in regard to the fishery rights, are, in my opinion, all that could be reasonably expected, and I trust that the history of the negotiations will satisfy the Congress and the people of the United States that the Government has spared no effort to secure the rights and privileges which our citizens have long enjoyed in the waters of the British Dominions, so long a subject of anxious difference between the United States and Great Britain, and which, in the absence of any adverse vote of the Senate, I had hoped, and still hope, negotiations were instituted to secure, by the concession of the Dominion Government, the enjoyment of such joint interpretation and consideration of the provisions of the convention of 1818, relating to the territorial waters and inshore fisheries of the British Dominions, as would secure the enjoyment of the privileges guaranteed to them by such convention.

The question involved are of long standing, of grave consequence, and of a character which for nearly three-quarters of a century have given rise to earnest international discussion, and have caused the United States and Great Britain, governments treaties have served to allay friction, which, however, has revived as each lively has occasion.

The treaty agreement, under the treaty of 1818, of the United States, on June 30, 1885, for I was enabled to obtain the concurrence of the Senate, in the exercise of the privileges accorded by the Dominion. The Joint Commission by which the treaty had been negotiated, although invested with plenary powers, failed to reach a satisfactory settlement,

Bathing in Great Salt Lake.

As there is much apprehension in regard to the effects of a bath in Great Salt lake, I determined to try the experiment, writes a correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle. There are three bathing places about ten miles from the city, reached after a ride over a strip of desert country on a narrow gauge road. The location is certainly a charming one, and well worthy a visit. As a background a high promontory of the Oquirrh range juts upward but a few hundred feet from the shore, while a long chain of the Wasatch range bounds the southern shore in a semicircular shape, fading away in the west until the distant peaks are blended with the shadows of the crags of Antelope island, which rears aloft its jagged face directly in front. Scores of ripple dimple the smooth surface of a deep green water, which stretches away as far as the eye can see. The place selected for bathing has a bottom of soft, white sand, the boundaries of the shallow water being marked by lines of rope, and extending out two hundred to three hundred feet. It is a strange sight to see women and hundred people taking a sea bath and coming out with their as dry as when they entered. To swallow a quantity of the water is to invite strangulation, but the head can safely be ducked under water, provided the mouth and eyes are kept tightly closed. However, very few seem inclined to take these chances, and so the summer that dive under are easily counted, but they prove that the dangers are overestimated and that the terrible effects of a thorough immersion are the result of a baseless superstition and have no existence in fact. A severe burning results from getting the water into the eyes, but frequent ejection accustoms the bather to the strength of the saline solution, and the few who indulge in a genuine plunge do so with the utmost impunity. A novel spectacle is furnished by a long line of men and women, with hands interlocked, strung out over the water, floating without effort, the density of the water keeping them above the surface.

Gold-Plated Watches.

"I gold, silver, or nickel-plate anything from a lady's pin to a brass watch," said a plating mechanic to a Brooklyn Eagle reporter. "Gold-plating is cheap nowadays, as compared with former years. What are the principal articles plated? Watches, rings and other articles of jewelry. I will put a gold-plate on a watch guaranteed for a year for $3.50 and not so good a plate for $2. Rings cost 25, 35 and 50 cents each to plate with gold. If you will stop this way I will show how plating is done."

The reporter's informant led the way to a rear room containing a dozen electric batteries to which were attached thin steel wires. On a bench were small cups containing liquid gold, silver, and nickel. The gold used is 24 carats fine. To illustrate the process the operator took a silver ring and after washing it in a preparation twirled one of the wires attached to the batteries around it. The electricity was then turned on and the ring dipped in the liquid gold. Instantly the ring assumed a bright red color and this was succeeded by a golden hue. In less than two minutes the ring was taken out with a sufficient good plate to last a year, or at least so said the operator. Spoons, knives and forks and in fact everything imaginable are plated in the manner described. There is big money in the business, as but little gold is used in the plating process.

"I can so heavily plate a watch that keep within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes its cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. eow1

Saved His Life.

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxon, of Horse Cave, Ky., says he was, for many years, afflicted with phthisis, also diabetes; the pins were almost unendurable, and would sometimes almost throw him into convulsions. He tried Electric Bitters and got relief from first bottle and after taking six bottles was entirely cured, and had gained in his pounds. Says he positively believes his life was saved by Electric Bitters. 8 d & 50 cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

The Filial Lao.

Three thousand years ago a man whose name was Lao-Lai-tsz had both parents living, though he himself was 70 years old. He not only provided the ancient couple with dainty dishes, and waited on them day and night, but he would "dress up" to amuse them, and would dance and play with his toys, and pretend to tumble down and "cry, and then nestle up to his father and mother to be kissed and coaxed and comforted. All this was done with a loving desire to make the old folks happy. Laws that they were once more a young married couple, and had a baby child. Mrs. Bryan.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unexampled success of Shiloh's Cure, German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes its cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. How to Preserve Beauty.

It is stated that a well-known society woman of Baltimore, who preserves her beauty and freshness remarkably well, despite her many season's pursuit of excitement in the social whirl, attributes her good fortune to constantly using a small cup of lukewarm water every day on leaving her couch. So strong is her faith in the efficacy of this remedy that its omission is sure to cause depression and languor. In speaking of this a few days ago a well-known matron of Baltimore said, "I have known many ladies to be equally devoted to some article which could not possibly have benefited them except through their imagination. One lady I know has a glass of toast water placed beside her bed by her maid every morning. Another uses a half teaspoonful of tincture of cinchona in a goblet of water; still another takes a pinch of table salt into her mouth before leaving bed. Lots of India rubber to attach common articles as oranges and lemons and apollinaris water, or to cool plunge baths, but the most singular freak I ever heard of was that of a Philadelphia belle, who every morning regularly gargled her throat with soapsuds made of white castile soap which she believed was absolutely necessary to the preservation of her health."—Baltimore Sun.

10. Concerted action in fostering manufacturing and other enterprises; and in securing reductions in freight, express, and insurance rates, when exhorbitant.

11. To stimulate a determination to render the title "Business Man" synonym for honor, firmness, probity, justice and high morals.

ARTICLE III—MEMBERSHIP.

Any firm or individual, doing an honorable business, may become a member of this Association on the two-thirds vote of the members present at any regular meeting, by paying to the secretary the sum of $1 membership fee and agreeing to pay 25 cents quarterly dues in advance, and any assessments which may be voted by the Association to meet expenses.

ARTICLE IV—OBLIGATION.

Every person or firm becoming a member of this Association shall be honorably bound to conform to the rules, regulations and by-laws.

ARTICLE V—NON-PAYMENT OF DUES.

Any member of this Association who shall neglect or refuse to pay his dues, or any assessment ordered by the Association, for three months after such sum becomes due, shall thereby forfeit his membership.

ARTICLE VI—OFFICERS.

The officers of this Association shall consist of a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, an Executive Committee of five members, of which the President, Secretary and Treasurer shall be three, and a Business Committee of three members. These officers shall be elected annually by ballot and shall hold office until their successors are elected.

ARTICLE VII—DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

Section 1—The President shall preside at all meetings, if present; in his absence, the Vice-President.

Section 2—The Secretary shall receive all money due the Association from any source and pay the same to the Treasurer, taking his receipt therefor; keep a record of all meetings; conduct all correspondence; keep a list of all members in a book provided for the purpose and notify all committees of their appointment.

Section 3—The treasurer shall receive all monies from the secretary, giving his receipt therefor; pay all bills when signed by the executive committee and report the condition of the treasury at each regular meeting.

Section 4—The executive committee shall have charge of the collection department and the publication of the delinquent list; shall provide rooms for the Association, pay all bills, and examine the books and accounts of the secretary and treasurer previous to each annual meeting.

Section 5—It shall be the duty of the business committee to look after all matters pertaining to the growth and well being of Charlevoix, to use all possible inducements to secure the location of mills, factories and other improvements, and to endeavor to secure any needed concessions in freight, express and insurance rates.

ARTICLE VIII—COMPENSATION.

No compensation for service shall be paid any officer, except the secretary.

ARTICLE XI—AMENDMENTS.

This constitution and by-laws may be altered or amended by a two-thirds vote of those present at any regular meeting, provided a written notice of such alteration or amendment has been presented at the preceding regular meeting.

ARTICLE XII—BY-LAWS.

By-laws not in conflict with this constitution may be established for the government of the Association on the two-thirds vote of the members present at any session.

BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I—QUORUM.

Five members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

ARTICLE II—EXPULSION.

Any member of this Association who shall be placed on the delinquent list shall stand expelled from the Association; and any member doing any act which tends to bring the Association into disrepute shall be expelled on the two thirds vote of the members present at any regular meeting.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

Rule 1. The special aim of this Association is to facilitate the collection of doubtful accounts and other debts by fair and honorable methods, and to guard against the extending of credit to debtors found on investigation to be unworthy of it.

Rule 2. The Association emphatically asserts that it hopes to collect all debts due the members without publicity, and that it neither desires nor intends, in any instance, to permit its members to intentionally annoy or to persecute any person indebted to members of the association.

Rule 3. That no injustice may be done to, or advantage taken of, any debtor, by any individual member of the association, it shall be the duty of every member to send by mail a sealed circular letter, issued by the association, to the debtor, setting forth these facts, to-wit: That the person named in said letter is indebted to the member of the firm thereon named in the sum of $——, that the debtor is granted twenty days from date entered on said letter in which to pay the debt, or to satisfactorily arrange for its payment; that, if after the expiration of the twenty days thus granted, the debtor shall have failed to pay or failed to have arranged for payment, the member shall report him for the secretary, who shall also mail to the person so reported another circular letter, setting forth the fact that he is indebted to the member named and that unless he pays or arranges to pay, the amount within fifteen days he will be reported to the executive committee as a delinquent. The committee will then take his case under consideration, and, if they deem best, place his name on the dead-beat list.

Rule 4. The second circular letter sent to the debtor shall be enclosed in the authorized envelope of the Association, on which shall be printed, "If not called for in fifteen days return to Charlevoix Business Men's Association," and the non-return of any circular letter thus mailed, shall be deemed sufficient evidence that every dad letter was received by the debtor addressed.

Rule 5. Disputed accounts shall be investigated by the executive committee, whose report on the same shall be acted upon by the Association.

Rule 6. Any member who shall be found the well-being of any community, and

WHEREAS, We believe that a Business Mens Association, will accomplish these objects; therefore

RESOLVED, That we, business men of Charlevoix and vicinity, duly assembled on December 16, 1886, do hereby organize ourselves into such an Association and adopt the constitution and by-laws following:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I—NAME.

The name of this organization shall be the Charlevoix Business Men's Association.

ARTICLE II—OBJECTS.

The objects of this Association shall be to unite merchants and other reputable business men for reform, development of industries and work for the general good, and to promote, by all legitimate means, the social, moral and business interests of its members. Among the special objects sought to be obtained are the following:

1. Promoting kinder feelings toward honorable competitors and removing the inclination to invade and criminate neighbors in trade.
2. Greater care to secure good helpers and make and keep them worthy by a livelier interest in their efforts, habits and comforts.
3. Inspiring confidence between buyer and seller by doing business on legitimate principles.
4. Shorter hours for doing business in, and an honest endeavor to educate the buyer to make his purchases between 7 a. m. and 6 p. m., six days a week.
5. The proper observance of all national holidays and more frequent intervals for rest and recreation.
6. Abolishing the tendency to indiscriminate credit and stimulating the selling of merchandise for ready pay.
7. Protection against inferior and adulterated goods, short weights, counts and measures, fictitious brands

Business Men's Association.

Last Thursday evening about twenty-five or thirty of the business men of Charlevoix assembled at Odd Fellows' hall for the purpose of organizing a business men's association. Dr. Crouter called the meeting to order and named John Nichols for chairman; R. W. Kane was made secretary. Dr. Crouter then read the call for the meeting, and the names of those who had signed it, after which Frank Hamilton, of the firm of Hamilton & Milliken, Traverse City, addressed the meeting on the general objects and results of association.

E. A. Stowe, of the Grand Rapids Tradesman, followed with a detailed description of the collection system as adopted by associations generally throughout the state, with the methods of organizing and conducting the associations.

On motion of Dr. Crouter it was resolved to immediately proceed to organization, and the constitution of the Tustin association was adopted (We also print below the by laws of the Tustin association, with the changes suggested for Charlevoix, but these have not been formally adopted.)

The constitution as adopted, and by laws as suggested are as follows:

The idea prevails throughout some of the more uninhabitant parts of Antrim county that a railroad will go meandering around for "picturesque scenery," cedar swamps and big hills for a direct route to Charlevoix, and leave the most thickly populated parts of Antrim county and most feasible routes in the background. We don't agree with them. When a railroad company goes threshing an uninhabited, mountainous, swampy wild forest with a view to increasing their railroad traffic and the size of their pocket book, large apples will grow on hemlock trees, and people will pay their printer bills. Eastport is destined to be one of our largest fruit and grain markets. All we want is an outlet to the outside world, which we will get. We have the oldest settled farms, the most productive orchards and the most live citizens in Antrim county, (Elk Rapids and vicinity excepted of course.) Now Ben stick to the question and we will stand to your back until your abdominal prominence collapses. And if Elk Rapids can't raise the sufficient amount to induce the railroad to come along, Eastport will chip in handsomely. Give them the nest you've got. Go it the whole length of your suspenders if you bust a tug; Eastport may be in a fossilized state, but she "aint" so lean and poor yet that the wind will blow through her and find nothing, and when such embryo towns as Bellaire and Central Lake come crying out of the wilderness, that they look for a railroad to pierce that wild domain, where the moccasined footprint of the aborigine is yet warm; where the wily and suspecting deer yet coax their paths at will; where even the blazed footpath is yet a stranger, it is time we have our say. Along the peaceful waters of Grand Traverse Bay, nature in the antediluvian ages laid out a railroad bed as level as the prairie, as hard as granite, with cedar ties every mile on each side of the road. Now why should a railroad company go back on natural advantages, eh!

Bellaire may whoop, Bellaire may howl,
The freeze may blow all day;
But it won't blow a railroad into that town,
For it won't be built that way.

Eveline.

A merry Christmas to all.

Tolerably good sleighing.

Wanted—A mild winter.

Times in Eveline are good.

Xmas Saturday, when that good old fellow, Santa Claus makes his tour.

Mr. Harden Sheldon lost a horse last Friday, by falling on a stump while hauling wood.

The school at Advance commenced for the winter on Monday, Dec. 6th, with Miss Anna Cooper, of Charlevoix, as principal.

Families of both Indians and whites, are arriving in Eveline most every day. Let more come and the consequence is that all of the empty houses are fast becoming filled up. But there is always room for another.

The times are lively, and logs and wood are being hauled to the beaches of Pine lake and South Arm at a lively rate.

Tax time has arrived, for which you have the opportunity to step in to the treasures office and pay the same before Jan. 1st, and save the extra per centage.

Pine lake froze over Saturday night last. This is nearly three weeks earlier than last year, when it froze on the night of Jan. 6th. It is also two weeks earlier than the average.

It is reported that the Congregationalists will hold a Christmas tree at their church at Ironton on Christmas night, Dec. 25, 1886.

We were pained to hear of the death of Mrs. Sarah J. Morehouse at East Jordan, on last Thursday morning after many weeks of suffering. She was formerly of Ironton, and leaves many friends in that community to mourn her loss. The bereaved family have the sympathy of all.

There will be preaching in the Freeman school house next Sunday at 2:30 by J. T. Iddings.

Ironton.

Ample preparations are being made for a merry Christmas. Two fine trees will be loaded with good things for the Sunday school. The light of six dozen wax candles will be provided to see the numerous gifts for the wee ones, and those of larger growth. Three o'clock Saturday afternoon is the hour appointed to meet. The general supervision is under the management of E. A. Lewis, our kind superintendent, Mr. Holmes, pastor, and one or two others. The ladies are doing their full share, all joining to make a happy time.

We have the pleasure of announcing the arrival of a physician, Dr. W. H. Hile, who will be a resident physician in Ironton.

The company's teams are now at their winter's work hauling. Work on the stack progresses rapidly under master workmen.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

A Washington special to the Chicago Tribune says the friends of the Hennepin Canal, have short decided on their course of action. They will send a delegation to the Illinois Legislature at Springfield early in January, and try to have passed through a bill meeting the objections of the Comstock Board to the acceptance by the General Government of the Illinois and Michigan Canal under existing conditions. They have decided that all the trouble received so far by the Legislature without again submitting the question to the people. With these objections overcome, they believe an indorsement of the project can be got from Secretary Endicott on the ground of commercial importance. Referred by this, they won'd make a final attempt in Congress to again graft Hennepin on the river and harbor bill. It is a forlorn hope, but the Hennepinites insist they will not give up the fight."

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Hon. G. L. Yaple late democratic candidate for governor, will enter the lecture field this winter. One of his lectures is entitled "Thinking and working."

The Detroit Evening Journal issued a sixteen-page illustrated Christmas number last Saturday.—the largest issue of an evening paper in Michigan we ever saw, and all for two cents.

Discussing the question of cutting prices, the Grand Rapids Tradesman says: "By meeting the cutter's prices, you virtually admit that the cutter is right, and your trade have good reason for thinking that you have swindled them most outrageously in the past." Instead of meeting cut prices at a loss, the editor advises the use of some argument like the following:—Yes, you can get your goods cheaper at the place you mention, but that man cannot sell goods at the prices he advertises without either losing money or giving second grade goods. We don't propose to do either. We won't sell anything but standard goods, and when we can't do business at a profit we shall give it up."

Cheboygan Conference Congregational Church.

The Cheboygan conference of Congregational churches and ministers met in its tenth (the printed programs by mistake were headed ninth) annual meeting at Kalkaska, Dec. 14-16. Rev. M. W. Tuck of Wolverine was chosen moderator, Rev. B. J. Baxter, of Mancelona, scribe. Rev. E. W. Miller, of Big Rapids, state S. S. superintendent, preached the opening sermon, which was followed by the Lord's Supper. Subjects discussed were, "Practical Preaching," opened by Rev. B. J. Baxter; "Is non-professional study by a pastor advisable?" Rev. A. T. Waterman; "Christian giving on business principles," Rev. C. D. Banister, of Northport; "Christian comity," Rev. W. H. Millar, of Gaylord. Mr. Millar was at the last election union candidate for state senator in his district. Rev. E. W. Miller presented "The relation of the Sunday school to the church." The subject of "Infant Baptism" was ably presented by Rev. R. M. Burgess, of Alba. L. M. Kamargy, M. D., of Atwood, read a valuable paper on the duty of church members with regard to ministerial support, financial and moral. Wednesday evening was devoted to the subjects of church building and home missions. This meeting of the conference was well attended and the exercises were of marked value.

The next meeting will be held in Northport, June 14, 1887.

In an Indian mound near Oakland, Ind., was unearthed recently a stone wall ten feet square. Within were five or six skeletons, three copper vessels filled with fifty pounds of rich silver ore, a copper ax weighing eighteen pounds attached to a stone handle, and a number of stone hatchets.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable phase in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt (frequently called Dr. Pete) is, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practise enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world mark a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of faith ever says "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Perry Weed, and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Excitement in Michigan

Continues over the grand victory over pain, neuralgia, burns, and rheumatism, achieved by Dr. Pete's Magic Pain Oil. Only 25 cents for the largest bottle. Warranted to Cure. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposure, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A hard cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who know me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

THE PANSY'S MESSAGE.

BY MANDA T. CROCKER.

Heart of my heart, this blossom brings
A silent message, sweet, to thee,
As in its purple beauty clings
Love's note appeal, "Please think of me."

All bloom hath language, oft so sweet,
That smiles and tears commingle there,
As the leaflets cluster round your feet
In sun-lemt of love's fond prayer.

They are God's love to us, these blossoms,
So sweet that they our paths attend,
Sent from afar, wooing the touch
And carry friendship to a friend.

So, into your back leafs on its way
O'er life's dark, troubled, heat-vexed sea,
Cling close these leafs, and mind the day
They breathed this message, "Think of me."

And sometimes, when the weather's fair,
And we have fair, sunny days of true
To keep our trust, well back at care,
And sail our ships on waters blue.

Deep in my soul this song's attuned,
Sweet, tender, thrilling, pure and true;
This song of blossom-laden wood
To make my heart's best wishes known.

So, friend of mine, may blessings fall
Like dews for you a summer sun,
Here, take my hand. Ah! is that all?
No, take my heart! "Pansies think of me."

The Partisans of Virginia.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

We will take a long jump at the start, and come down to the middle of April, 1865. The weary, sanguinary war was practically over. Lee had surrendered; so had Johnston, or was just about to surrender; there were no more battles to be fought, and it was plain enough that the immense Union armies would in a very brief time be required to doff their blue, and the soldiers to take their chances in that great battle of life, which always a very serious affair, although it has no guns, and drums, and wounds—

God save the mark!

The sanguinary reader might naturally say that nothing interesting could be expected to happen at such a time as that. So it would appear; yet it was at just that time that an incident occurred in the part of the military division to which I served that, while not very important in itself, opened to me a whole field of the most interesting reminiscences.

The bloodied was the coming in of two of Mosby's band to General Dwight's headquarters near Winchester, Va., to surrender themselves and give their parules not to take up arms against the United States.

They were the first of this noted band who had claimed this privilege, and the incident naturally excited some interest and curiosity about headquarters. My narrative must not be unreasonably drained with the details of what is properly history, or by the ways and wherefores of the case as it related to these men, and it will be sufficient under this head to say that, upon hearing of the surrender of Lee, Colonel Mosby assembled his command at one of their rendezvous between the Upper Blue Ridge and the Potomac, told them that the war was ended, that they had nothing now to do but to go home and peacefully submit to the authority of the United States, and that he should claim the national protection for them. Immediately upon disbanding his troop, he sent a message to general Hancock, who at this time commanded at the Shenandoah Valley, asking if his men were to be accorded the same terms that Grant had given to Lee. The character of Mosby's warfare in this section had been such that Hancock was in some doubt about the matter, and telegraphed direct to City Point for instructions.

The reply came promptly back, that these men were to have the same treatment as other Confederate soldiers. The dispatch was sent to Mosby, and his guerrillas hastened to give their parules and receive their protection papers. The two who came to our headquarters were the "advance-guard" of this movement.

General Dwight at this time commanded a division of what had been the Army of the Shenandoah, and I was an officer on his staff. A soldier could not possibly have served through that tremendous and sanguinary valley campaign under Sheridan of the summer and fall of 1864, without hearing much—and perhaps seeing something—of Mosby's guerrillas. I had often heard of them, and, as will appear later, had seen something of their work; and now that all the bloodshed was past, I felt a great desire to see and talk with some of them about their hard experiences, and their peculiar way of carrying on war. No better opportunity was likely to occur than this; so when our provost marshal had got through with these two disbanded warriors of the late Confederacy, and they were strolling about our headquarters, taking note of much that was new and strange to them, I took them under my protection long enough to have the long and interesting conversation with them. My task was mainly with the younger of the two, a bright, brisk young Virginian, who had lived on a plantation in this valley before the war, and who had taken his horse and mount Mosby upon the commencement of hostilities, just as thousands of young Virginians went to Stuart, Ashby, and Mosby, from love of excitement and adventure, and without very much thought or care as to which side was right or wrong. The conversation, as I remember it—what I said to him, and what he said to me—will better illustrate the character and style of this partisan warfare in the Shenandoah Valley, which lasted and hampered Sheridan from first to last, than any mere statement of fact could do.

"You Mosby men," I remarked, "are treated as Confederate soldiers now, since Lee's surrender, but our army in the valley here hasn't been used to regard you so. We have always considered you a lot of partisans or guerrilla-irregulars, I believe, is the correct name."

"Well, sir, you've been mistaken. We are just as much Confederate so diers as any in General Lee's army. Every man is regularly mustered in, and our officers all have their commissions from Richmond."

"But you have not usually acted in a body, and not always even in a squad. Sometimes, to my knowledge, your men have prowled about our camps by twos and threes."

"O, yes," he said, "that's our way of fighting. It's not very often that as many as a hundred of us have ridden together. Ever man owns his horse; most of us have our homes within fifteen miles east or west of the Blue Ridge. Mosby has always had certain established places of meeting, which are perfectly secure, and when the band is dispersed and almost every man at his own home, it would unnecessary to say how quickly they can be all called in. Most of the people, of course, were friendly to us; they would carry messages to and for us, and help and hide us when we were pressed. And then how could you folks ever know who we were? We did not usually wear any uniform—except your uniform, which we would sometimes put on. You couldn't tell that the innocent-looking cotton-wool stuff in front of his house by the side of the road as your team marched by was one of the Mosby troops, and that before night Mosby would know all that he had discovered about you. But that happened often."

"Yes; and I remember about General Custer hanging some of your men as spies."

"And didn't you hear of Mosby retaliating, and leaving half a dozen of your soldiers he had taken swinging to the trees, with a placard on the breast of each? I have heard him say more than once that he'd hang one of Sheridan's soldiers for every one of his that was executed; and I think he did.

"What made you fellows throw trains off the track on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, between Martinsburg and Harper's Ferry?"

"Oh—that was for the greenbacks. Sometimes up in the mountains I've known Mosby to call a lot of us together and tell about like this: 'Now, men, about five o'clock this afternoon there's a train due at Harper's Ferry from Baltimore. After it starts, stop it goes on to Martinsburg. There'll be a Yankee paymaster aboard, with a chest full of greenbacks, to pay the troops at Martinsburg. I want those greenbacks. We need them to pay them.' And we did not often fail to do it.

"I type you don't think it civilized warfare to throw railroad trains off the track with women and children aboard?"

I did not call it anything; he replied with a laugh. "Mosby wanted the money, and ordered us to get it; and we took the easiest way we could. One of those green dollars was worth two in Confederate money anywhere in the valley."

Some of the Mosby statement may appear, I know it to be true from personal observation.

"But," I said, "what I particularly want to know, is whether you men did all this fighting in your own way, or did you really, as I have heard, put on blue overcoats and ride along in our camps some night on the march?"

"Indeed we did! Do you happen to remember a time in August when your army fell back from near Strasburg to Halltown? I had good reason to remember that march. It was a disagreeable night—rainy in the rain, on which I marched with my company.

"And perhaps you were along on a certain retreat from Snicker's Ferry through the gap to Washington, the month before? Ah, was I not! That was the worry march, when soldiers should overcome and in the torrid July weather stumbled along, without sleep, for two days.

"Well, sir, on both those times I rode along with your colonel commanding, and with some General's escort, and picking up the information I gave you. I felt perfectly safe—I was perfectly safe. Those were dark nights, as you know, and nobody could detect me; my blue overcoat was a perfect protection. Just out of Stanton's Gap, as daylight was coming on, and I was about ready to move, one of your infantry soldiers straggled off a few rods for something or other. I rode up to him, showed him my pistol, told him who I was, and that he should shoot him if he did not go quietly along before my horse. He was too much astonished to disobey; and I took him right away as a prisoner. It was no unusual thing for us to do this."

"Were your horses all good?"

"As a rule, they were. I care that one of us did not own his animal, so we had many good Virginia thoroughbreds among us. With such horses we could do almost anything. Shall I tell you my closest shave on an escape? It was over near Upperville, one night when I was stopping at a friend's house. My horse was in the barn, unsaddled and unbridled, with nothing but a rope halter round his neck. I was up-stairs, shed and asleep. We never slept with both eyes; they were the tramp of cavalry roused me, and I heard my friend's whole household in a flurry. I ran out on nothing, and I knew it was prudent to surrender; but I couldn't even do that very easily, for the barn was between my fellows thought of, I jumped up, put on trousers and shoes, and waiting for nothing else, raised the window and dropped out to the ground where the soldiers were coming up stairs. They had surrounded the house, of course, and I expected to be seen and halted as I darted for the barn; but I paid no attention to that, and a carbine-ball whistled over my h ad as I ran. I cut the cups, jumped on, and rode out right through half a dozen of the cavalrymen. I knew the rebel horse was gone from the start—and go she did, taking the fence at a leap, and flying up the road with a shower of balls after us. Neither of us was hit. But it was a great sick-ness to ride a race for any one to take. I mighta have cut off twice out of a hundred times such a chat."

"You people made yourselves very useful to the Confederacy during our wagon trains, last fall," I remarked.

"Yes, that was always one of the Colonel's strong points. He had a eye on about it, too. He usually chose the time when the train was drawing out of park, in the morning, and there was more or less confusion among the mules and teamsters. Twenty horsemen dashing at that time, with a yell, would put the teamsters to flight, and leave the train to us. We had fastry guard was generally small, and they could scarcely attempt it once."

"I can tell you of one train that you folks didn't dare attack," I observed. "Year the last of September the One Hundred and Fo'rtieth New York was sent by wagon train from Harrisonburg back to Martinsburg, an hundred miles or more, to guard a long, empty train and one hundred prisoners, and ten to return with the wagons loaded with commissary stores and forage. We made the whole distance, and went back to the army in time to lose half our men in the battle of Cedar Creek; we dropped every prisoner to the provost marshal at Martinsburg, and lost not a man nor a wagon. Do we wave colors? The soldiers rode in the wagons, keeping their muskets in their hands; the officers were on horseback, riding along with the train; we always had flankers out, and many times they reported horsemen prowling about. We was camped at which day a detment was formed in a square around the wagons and prisoners.

"One incident of this march I shall never forget. A mile north of Mount Crawford, as the train passed along, we saw a dead man upon the side of the road. It was that of a soldier, dressed in a bright, new gray uniform, and he was shot through the heart. Some of the men knew him, and said he belonged to a Pennsylvania regiment. Right in the middle of his forehead was the round hole made by the bullet that had killed him.

"This poor fellow was evidently some straggler, who had been 'bushwhacked.' Of course, I cannot say whether Mosby's men or some others shot him down from behind the wall; but it was murder, whoever did it."

I then told an incident which occurred the glorious August, at which the whole Nineteenth Corps had laughed, and which illustrated not only the audacity of the guerrillas, but the non-chalance of General Emory, who commanded the corps. "Just at nightfall, and the close of one of the long and weary marches, when the headquarters tents had been pitched, a squad of horsemen came riding along at full gallop, and disappeared. The whole thing was over, and the bewildered had come and gone before it crept through the hair of the astonished officer commanding the infantry company which acted as head-quarters guard that they were none of Mosby's guerrillas, and that he might have given them a volley and shed every one of them off he had been ready. It was to the officer that the line officer sent word said.

"Such carelessness, sir—such shameful negligence! Why, those fellows might have stolen my horse!"

My interview with the paroled guerrilla closed by my relating a most interesting incident, which occurred early in the winter, which had been the talk of our little army of occupation, and of which the news had also heard, as will appear.

The outpost at Sunset Point, some miles north of Winchester, was held by the Thirteenth Massachusetts Cavalry, under Major Lee.

One of its Lieutenants (his name I have for, often, and it would hardly be fair to give it if I knew it but, during the campaign, made the acquaintance of a Virginia girl. Was lived about three miles from the camp. It was not a very prudent thing for the Lieutenant to ride over alone, but, considering how the guerrillas swarmed about this section, but, then, he was the first man who got into trouble by running after a pretty face—and he probably will not be the last.

One afternoon he set off with the lady at her home, probably conversing about things that were remote from war and slaughter, when he happened to look out of the window. Two men had just ridden into the yard. They were both young, both were dressed in Virginia homespun, both rode powerful black horses.

The Lieutenant's horse was in the barn, feeding on Virginia corn.

The Lieutenant looked down the road. A dozen more horsemen were coming.

A very bad scrape it seemed to be; but the Lieutenant was a cool-headed and a determ ination, and these high qualities came to him.

He did not wait to find his hat—nor to say good-by to the lady. He ran out of the door—it was locked! He raised the sash and jumped out.

The foremost of the two, however, was in the act of throwing himself from his horse, when a bullet from the Lieutenant's pistol caused him to pitch forward his dead on the ground.

The other rider had not time to draw a pistol when another ball went through his shoulder.

The Lieutenant did not wait for any more enemies. He leaped on a man's horse, gave him the spur, cleared the fence with a flight of leap, and thundered down the road toward the camp, with the guerrillas firing at him from a parenst. But he had the leader's horse, he is at of the lead, and the bullets and reached camp in safety. A man who was thus humiliated by the scene of this is remarkable escape. Save his life, the Lieutenant's lay, and soon fell on the ground before the door, no discoveries were made. The girl was crying bitterly. She insisted that she knew nothing about the guerrillas, but our Lieutenant never doubted that this modern Delilah was the bait of one of the guerrilla number, and that he had himself narrowly escaped a clean cut of the shears.

"Did you," I asked of the paroled man, "hear anything about this?"

He smiled at first, and then looked grave.

"I should think I ought to, sir; I was one of the squad that chased the other to the Shenandoah River. I was with the Captain when dead on the ground and our Lieutenant with a wound that he hasn't got over yet. The Captain was one of Mosby's best officers. The Colonel felt decidedly when he learned what had happened. But I was with the Captain when he died—a fellow—just the kind of man Mosby likes for his officers."

Kindness to Children.

A writer in speaking of the need of making home attractive to children says: The time comes fast enough when there will be no little careless hand to make a frame on the clean table cloth, no tiny fingers to set the things round, no clatter of childish feet in the hall, no ringing laugh may cover all the marks on the hard-finish; patiently removed the additions heavily on the woodwork, and those traces of boy pranks that still remain, the mother's eye and heart may cherish as sacred to the memory of the absent.

In a country where the moral atmosphe e, the boy and the girl will go through the same ordeal, and be taken from childhood to adult life, dropping whatever is in its nature juvenile, little by little, as naturally as the blossom drops its seminal leaves; but the forbearance and loving patience of the wise father and judicious mother who trained them from "sagging," will not be forgotten.

Anarchism Is Insanity.

A learned physician in Paris takes the position that anarchism and communism are a species of insa nity. The leaders of extreme social revolutions, he says, have been affected largely by insanity often taking a homicidal form.

This was well shown in the case of the Paris commune of 1-71. Among the communists no less than 1,700 persons were found to be insane and had to be sent to the hospital for over a year. And among the leaders in that outburst, four were discovered upon examination to be insane and had to be placed in the hospital for over a year. And among the leaders in that outburst, four were discovered upon examination to be insane and had to be placed under treatment for insanity.—Lancet Sifting.

PERISHED IN THE FLAMES.

Many Lives Lost in a Burning Steamer on the Mississippi River.

The J. M. White Destroyed Near Bayou Sara, La.—Thrilling Scenes and Incidents.

[New Orleans special]

The steamer J. M. White, on her down trip from Vicksburg, caught fire at 10:30 o'clock on Tuesday night while at St. Maurice Landing, 9 miles from Bayou Sara, four miles above Bayou Sara, and was entirely destroyed in a few minutes. The fire originated near the boiler, and spread with such rapidity that the flames enveloped it a boat before warning of their danger could be given the passengers and crew. One of the mates was the one to see the fire from the river bank, and by the time he reached the cabin the smoke was so dense that he could only awaken the occupants of a few of the rooms to front and escape with all the officers to a place of safety. All the books and papers in the clerk's office were destroyed. Capt. Jones was asleep in his room at the time, and was notified just in time to save his life.

All the passengers in the forward cabin were saved, with one exception. Some of the ladies' cabin were shut off from retreat by the flames, and were burned in their rooms or were forced to jump into the river, where only three were saved.

Washington Lloyd, Captain of the Will Hays of Louisville, saw the danger in time to save himself, but rushed back into the burning cabin to save the occupants, and was himself destroyed.

The following is a partial list of the lost:

Mr. Spofford, Superintendent of the Vicksburg and Vidalia Railroad, wife, and child.

Captain Wash Floyd of the Will S. Hays.

Miss Agnes McCall of West Feliciana.

Two women, names not known.

Two white men, names not known.

There were twenty-one colored, including several of the boat hands, and two negro preachers, who were also killed. Chief Engineer McGreevy says:

There were four kegs of powder in the magazine, and the moment the fire reached them the flames shot up about one hundred feet high. The sight was the most terrifying one ever witnessed by a human being. The shrieking of women and children for help was awful. I saw the superintendent of the Vidalia road railroad standing outside the ladies' cabin, throwing several of the boat hands, and two negro preachers, who were also killed. Chief Engineer McGreevy says:

There were four kegs of powder in the magazine, and the moment the fire reached them the flames shot up about one hundred feet high. The sight was the most terrifying one ever witnessed by a human being. The shrieking of women and children for help was awful. I saw the superintendent of the Vidalia road railroad standing outside the ladies' cabin, throwing a life-preserver to the people in the water. He stood there and turned to death with a smile. There was in the cabin two lady passengers and about eight men. At low water twenty-one feet water is found on board. All is supposed to be lost.

The J. M. White was built in 1878, at a cost of $225,000, and was regarded by many as the finest and fastest boat ever run on the Mississippi River. The boat was owned by Capt. John W. Jones. She carried a cargo consisting of 2,100 bales of cotton and 6,000 sacks of seed. She was valued at $100,000, the cargo at $60,000. The insurance on the boat is $20,000, on the cargo consisting of 2,100 bales of cotton and 6,000 sacks of seed. She was valued at $100,000, the cargo at $60,000. The insurance on the boat is $20,000, on the cargo is doubtless full y covered by insurance.

JOHN E. OWENS.

Sketch of the Famous Comedian, Whose Death We Recently Announced.

John E. Owens was born in Liverpool, England, of Welsh parentage, in 1825, but may regard the United States as his only three years of age, by his parents, who first settled in Baltimore, Md., but after a residence of ten years in that city, removed to Philadelphia, where, by Mr. Owens, established himself in business. He made his first appearance under the management of the late Wm. E. Burton, at the National Theatre, Philadelphia, where Charlotte Cushman was then starling the public with her nan-festations of a powerful genius. On the 20th of August, 1845, Mr. Owens reappeared in Philadelphia at the Museum, Walnut Street Hall, as Jack Humphries, in "Turning the Tables," for the benefit of D. P. Bowers. In 1849 he became joint manager of the Baltimore Museum with Hunn, and in the succeeding year assumed the control of the establishment. In 1853 at the earnest solicitation of John Brougham, Mr. Owens consented to inaugurate with his performances Brougham's opening, New York, then new built, and met with a cordial reception. On the 20th of June, 1853, he for the third or fourth time sailed for Europe, and, during his absence engaged at the Adelphi Theater, made an extended tour of the continent. In 1854 he again entered into the management of the Charles Street Theatre, Baltimore. In 1859 he conducted the Varieties Theatre, New Orleans. In 1861 he visited England, where he met Wallack's Theatre, New York. In 1863 he visited England, playing "Solon Shingle." Returning to America he made this part peculiarly his own, playing it in all the large cities. As a comedian he ranks with the highest, and is at great in his parts as Jefferson and Clarke are in theirs.

THE TREASURY.

Business of the United States Treasurer's Office During the Last Fiscal Year.

From the annual report of the United States Treasurer it appears that the net receipts of the Government during the year ended June 30 were $336,653,737, and the net expenditures $346,933,126. The excess of revenue over expenditure was $10,279,389. The total receipts for the last fiscal year were over those of the preceding fiscal year $16,000,000. The Treasurer in his statement, announced to Congress on the second day of the present session, that the receipts from internal revenue for the year ending June 30, 1887, were $116,101,000 in round numbers, and the receipts from customs $244,000,000. The total receipts for the year were $336,000,000, and applied to the payment of the public debt $115,000,000, to the payment of interest on the public debt $47,000,000, and to the payment of the ordinary expenses of the government $184,000,000. The total expenditures for the year were $346,000,000, of which $106,000,000 were applied to the payment of principal of the public debt, $47,000,000 were applied to the payment of interest on the public debt, and $184,000,000 were applied to the payment of the ordinary expenses of the government

Does It Pay?

Three-fourths of our people are troubled with dyspepsia or liver complaint in some form other, which by nature of the disease has a depressing influence on the mind or body, preventing them from thinking or acting clearly in any matter of importance. Indigestion, coming on of food after eating, dyspepsia, sick headache, pain in the stomach or any derangement of the stomach or liver (upon which the whole action of our system depends) are speedily and effectually overcome by the use of Green's August Flower. The most stubborn cases have yielded to its influence, as thousands of letters received will testify. The immensity of this medicine is another guarantee of its merits, over a million and a half bottles sold last year. No sick, with it pay you to suffer from any of the above diseases when you can have immediate relief in the August Flower. Three doses will prove its worth. It is sold by all druggists and general dealers in all parts of the world. 3ow1

Sirens of the Stage.

What may be named a peculiar branch of feminine industry has been recently developed here, writes a New York correspondent. It consists of the entrapping into matrimony of silly and conceited young men, with rich fathers, by shrewd, though unscrupulous, burlesque actresses. The young men, commonly classed as idiots by sentimental sieges to the actresses, under the impression that they are irresistible. But the young women are so much more astute and artful than their hodgepots that these have not a chance with them. They end by becoming so desperately enamored of them—at least they fancy they are,—giving them costly presents, elaborate suppers, everything, in short, that money will buy. Still they are so far from winning their affections as at the outset, and we at last plainly told that they must agree to marriage before they can have any hope of conquering their histionic hearts. Strangely enough, although marriage never entered into their calculations at first, they not infrequently yield. Then she rich papa, hearing of his son's amorous imbecility, buys the young woman off, and she releases her latest victim to secure another. Half a dozen wealthy New Yorkers have, within a year, purchased their boys' freedom from these adventuresses by paying liberally for it.

Mr. J. E. M. Sanford of the Boston Courier has completed an American opera, which he has named "William Penn." The scene is laid in the year 1682, and the story deals with the early life of William Penn, whom Mr. Sanford depicts as a very different personage from the one familiar to school children. He claims that there is good authority for the statement, that Penn as a young man fought a duel, won a prize for his athletic performing, and did a number of other things not generally ascribed to him.

A Chapter on Girls.

It is a little difficult to describe the "charming girl." She has not as yet penetrated the remote country places, except in the faint reflections to be found in the columns of the illustrated story-papers. She has succeeded the "type" girl, however, in the current literature of a somewhat better order, and is a decided relief from the overingenuous, too-quickly loving, extraspontaneous maiden who preceded her. The charming girl usually knows a good deal. A man feels in talking to her that she has ideas, that she is quite out of the transitional stage between an affectionate creature of impulses and a rational human being. She is a companionable girl. She is less impressionable than the type girl was. As Mrs. Howe says, girls don't fall in love any more. It would be impossible for the truly charming girl to fall in love in the old-fashioned way, the way which led the amiable predecessor of the Angelina type to set her affections on a villain or an idiot and cling to him through thick and thin with a fidelity and a rapture that looks very silly to the charming girl. She knows herself better than ever a girl knew herself before. She is taught wisely and well by her careful mother, and no man can surprise her heart into surrender unless he has at least a few of the elements of genuine manliness and nobility, attractions of mind and spirit as well as of face and manner. Of course there is a sham charming girl who doesn't fall in love because she has no heart to lose, having lost it all in saturation of herself and her pretty graces. This incessant and effective little sham knows enough, however, to imitate the ways of the girl who is genuinely charming, and she gets up a very clever and interesting counterfeit oftentimes, and one which is extremely good to look at on a pleasant summer's day.

By and by, when the ideal girl comes to bless the world, there will, without doubt, be a sweet and pretty sham of her also to be found at the shore and mountain resorts, but the sham goes then upon the earth will flirt with to their hearts' content while the ideal girl will bow at the shrine of the ideal girl.

Lady Lenox and the Two Kings.

The beautiful Lady Sarah Lenox was the daughter of the duchess of Richmond, and was a child, a maiden, a mistress that the king, George II., frequently sent for to come over from Kensington palace and romp with him. The intimacy between the king and his little playmate continued until the child's mother died, when she was sent to live with a sister, the Lady Kildare, in Ireland, where she remained till her 14th year, when she returned to Holland House to reside with another sister, the wife of the first Lord Holland. When the king heard of her return he sent word for her to come over to the palace, but instead of the child of fourteen years, there stood before him in her beauty a full grown woman, embarrassed and blushing. The king made no effort to conceal his disappointment on finding her no longer a child, called her stupid and dismissed her from his presence. But the young prince of Wales, who lurked in the room, was much more interested in the young beauty than his stolid father, and his admiring eyes followed her beyond the king's presence and beyond the palace. George III. was close to second the throne of Great Britain when he expressed his preference for Lady Sarah to her friend, Lady Susan Strangways; her as she was already the fiancee of another, this suit met with no difference, though not long afterward the engagement was broken off, with a view, no doubt, to one with the king. He had broken his horse and breaking a lion while in the country, the king's subjects were were against his marrying anyone so low-born, second his engagement with Charlotte of Mecklenburg, whom he was afterward married. Notwithstanding this marriage, the king appears to have continued a strong liking for Lady Sarah for a when rolling out he would often pass Holland house to obtain sight of his early love; nor does the attachment seem to have cooled on one side, for Lady Sarah would disguise herself, and, Maid-Marian-like, rake the hay in the grounds of Holland house, that she might see the king as he passed.—R. G. Wilson, in Brooklyn Magazine.

"What kind of water is this?" asked Bubs as he drained off a glass of Irish whisky in the presence of his wife. "Cols, sir," answered his accommodating friend. And Mrs. Bunks was satisfied that her husband never drank intoxicants.—Chicago Rumbler.

GOLD-HUNTING.

Supernatural Guards About the Treasures the Pirates Buried.

The Rhode Island farmer gives much of his spare time to hunting for gold. Sometimes he hunts for mines, and now and then for the buried treasures of pirates. Stealthily a party have been digging for buried booty at night in a wild and chaotic region in the deep woods on the shore of Walton's Pond at Gloucester. While E. M. Taft and W. H. Woodhead were stalking wild bees recently they chanced on the diggings made by the treasure-hunters, who had worked spasmodically and with heavy machines for removing rocks and debris. Huge bowlders had been lifted and tipped over with powerful levers, a work that it would be difficult to do with derricks, and large holes excavated into the stony earth. Evidently the diggers had just completed the excavations and quitted the place, which is seldom visited even by hunters.

They had been trying to find the iron pots of gold which pirates who settled at Walton's Pond 150 years ago had buried among the ledges near the shore. An old woman who lived with the pirates said to her neighbors after the pirates fled to escape from officers that they had buried pots of gold in several places, but she did not know the places exactly.

Sixty years ago charcoal-burners found a big iron pot partly buried under the ledges and built over with stones. They drilled into the bottom of it, but out the water and got what was in the pot. What that was no one ever knew certainly, but the finders went West right after the discovery and were very wealthy. They never said what it was they found and they would not talk about iron pots if any one questioned them. Since then many Rhode Islanders have been digging among the ledges of Walton's Pond moonlight evenings, in places which the money-tongs indicated. Few of them knew the proper spells with which to keep the Devil off, and it is not known that he bothered his head about their clumsy attempts, or that they found anything more substantial than moonbeams. It is believed that the late seekers for treasure know their business and got something.

While they were busy hunting for pirates' gold another band of Rhode Island men dug into a gold mine in a dreary, wooded country near the Providence & Stonington Railroad, not far from this place. There is gold there, and rich gold, but it is forty-two feet beneath the surface of the ground. A shaft has been sunk twenty-two feet into the earth, and there is yet more to go before the gold ledge is many feet lower yet. There are both gold and silver in planting shining particles in the gravel of which the hill is composed, but it is not in paying quantity. The gold wand which the hunters use informs them that they will find the precious metal without doubt if only they will dig deep enough for it.

The Connecticut farmer is not much behind his Rhode Island neighbor in the search for gold and in his innate confidence that many spots in his fairly State are richly inlaid with pirates' treasures in strong boxes and heavy iron pots. Recently several farmers between Mystic and Stonington dug up a box of pieces of Spanish dollars, which proved plants by the lot of July. There is no need of being discouraged about those that at this time show no signs of putting forth a shoot. Pull one up and you will find the bottom calloused and free, while thread-like roots from as such cases the shoots will usually start from the eye below the surface. Where the first eye starts and grows the one below it grows also. In the fall or next spring one of these sprouts must be cut off, and the other trimmed down to a single eye. By this method farmers and others can easily and cheaply supply themselves with as many grape vines as they wish, and of the best varieties. Four-fifths of all the grapevine growth of the previous season must be cut off this fall or next spring, and it can usually be had for nothing. A few very hard-wooded and close-jointed grape vines do not root easily. Eumelan and Delaware are samples of these; but it is only necessary to take a little longer cutting and plant at an angle of 45 degrees in the ground. This will keep the bottom of the cutting within reach of the air and warmth. No manure is necessary; in fact, it is bottom-ly hurtful. Pulverizing forces the buds too rapidly, and may cause the bottom of the cutting to rot, instead of putting forth roots.—American Cultivator.

It is related by the Philadelphia Press that when Aunt M. Chalmers was visiting at the asylum by his wife recently he attempted twice to recognize her some friends who were with him but in vain. The first time he was standing with his wife, when a man came around, his mind had temporarily upset here, he asked, with a smile and a manner that showed that he was perfectly sane, if he knew and with unspeakable pathos the genial and graceful manner that in other days won him hearts everywhere. My dear friends, said he—I hope your husband is well—husband, husband, he was school, her eyes filling with tears. "Husband! I have had a husband but you, sir, ought to know—you ought to know—I know you, sir, I know you not know me now? I am your wife. "Say—say wife? he went on, with a low laugh. "My dear, dear, mistake, sorry. I—I never husband—this strength way way and he lay back in his chair, faint and trembling.

Seeding to Grass.

Farmers, as ordinarily situated, will hardly find the saving of grass seed, merely for their own use, to pay, says the Lime-Kiln Journal, except perhaps incidentally, as it may accumulate upon the close floor of a stable loft, the crop having been clear of weeds. This may be done for use in a small way, for relieving the growth of grass upon small patches of ground, but not for seeding down any considerable surface. For the same purpose, if it be desirable to scatter red top or other grass seed over a given surface, for the purpose of improving the yield of the land named, or of introducing the mixture with a kind already partially occupying the ground, this may be done by buying from a neighbor a stack, or a ton or two, that was cut a little late, the seed being well advanced toward maturity, feeding this hay out during the winter, well distributed over frozen ground, and if covered with snow all the better. Sheep handle hay fed out in this way, and for this purpose, better than other stock, as they beat out the seed and eat the hay close. As is well known, hay cut when the seed is fairly-well matured has a nominal value as feed, but yet if sound it supplies a want, and the direction in which it is deficient grain will supply. Perhaps this applies to none of the grasses more pointedly than to orchard grass. But for seeding a new piece of ground—that is, ground heretofore in tillage crops,—the seed had better be purchased by the bushel from a reliable dealer, the seed having been grown for market in a region of country where this is made a part of its agriculture, and where, consequently, special care is observed in growing the crop clear of weeds. If corn ground is used for seeding down, the stalks should be removed and all undue inequalities made smooth, so far as is practicable. A thorough harrowing with a loaded harrow will do this, not in going over once, but several times. The farmer should bear in mind that it is expected that he who grows hops as a regular business, having his name associated with that crop, and not especially with any other, will grow the article and save it in the best manner. Competition springs up, and he must not only grow the crop so that it will be commercially right, but the same competition that ensues its quality also insures its cheapness. This rule applies to the grass seeds, and applying this to any man who sos a lot for his tillage lands, to be kept advantageously in use for other crops, he had better not dabble in the business of growing grass seed, thinking to save by so doing.

Grape-Vines From Cuttings.

No kind of wood will more easily grow from the eye than the grape-vine. For this reason the rapid propagation of new varieties is a very easy matter. The nurserymen use single-eye cuttings in greenhouses, and this is a very good way wherever bottom heat can be furnished. But all this trouble and expense are not needed, provided the right course is taken and enough buds are left on the cutting. Even nurserymen do not rely entirely on the single-eye method. It is only used, in fact, for new varieties when wood is scarce and it is desirable to increase the vines as fast as possible. Cuttings set in the open ground should be prepared early in the spring, leaving two or at most three eyes on a piece. The lower part must be cut off square at the ledge where a bud has formed. Then remove this lowest bud with a sharp knife so as to make a clean cut. Leave the top eye just at the surface of the soil, which must be packed around the lower part very closely. Plant in rows three feet apart, and run the cultivator between them a week to keep weeds down. Plant cuttings six to eight inches apart in the row, and keep down weeds with the hoe. If the season is fairly favorable four-fifths of these cuttings will make strong-rooted plants by the 1st of July. There is no need of being discouraged about those that at this time show no signs of putting forth a shoot. Pull one up and you will find the bottom calloused and free, while thread-like roots from as such cases the shoots will usually start from the eye below the surface. Where the first eye starts and grows the one below it grows also. In the fall or next spring one of these sprouts must be cut off, and the other trimmed down to a single eye. By this method farmers and others can easily and cheaply supply themselves with as many grape vines as they wish, and of the best varieties. Four-fifths of all the grapevine growth of the previous season must be cut off this fall or next spring, and it can usually be had for nothing. A few very hard-wooded and close-jointed grape vines do not root easily. Eumelan and Delaware are samples of these; but it is only necessary to take a little longer cutting and plant at an angle of 45 degrees in the ground. This will keep the bottom of the cutting within reach of the air and warmth. No manure is necessary; in fact, it is bottom-ly hurtful. EASTERN.

Near Harmony Grove, Pa., T. B. Sanders decapitated John Swilling, his wife, and three children, and then fired the premises. His purpose was to secure $40 which he knew was in the house, and then decamp.

Walter B. Duffy, of Rochester, N. Y., made an assignment to cover liabilities on indorsements aggregating $75,000. It is stated that his insolvency is in no way affect the distilling company of which he is President.

A. J. McQuade, the convicted New York "boodle" Alderman, has been sentenced to seven years in the Penitentiary and to pay a fine of $5,000. The last act in the drama, says a New York dispatch, seemed to have even more interest for the public than the scene of the trial.

Chambers stood the approaches to the Brooklyn Bridge Court-house of the General Sessions, and when the prisoner came in sight. The large court-room was crowded, and the motion for a new trial was denied by recorder Smyth. McQuad was ordered to stand up, and on his with his thumbs in his pantaloons pockets, he received the sentence of the law. For a few moments he seemed to have been fairly and properly convicted of robbery, conspiracy, and perjury, a public duty and public trust. Instead of doing so you vindicated that trust, you betrayed it, you acted as a traitor, false to follow, and husband is good. I have sympathy for you in your misfortune. I have always been considered them before you old friend. But this act adds to the crime of which you have been convicted, an injury, by taking the money and committing perjury. I have reason to believe that you have spent a month since in July and August, that money is not yours; it is not the property of your wife; if it is her let them it will seem the inevitable result of illgotten gain. I would advise you to give up and pay back to the city the money which you received, and I have no doubt the Court will be lenient with you. I believe the Court is that you be confined in Sing-Sing prison at hard labor for a term of seven years, and that you pay a fine of $5000." During the sentence McQuade stood up, his arms in deed and his face pale, but his lips were firmly set. His chin was a little elevated, his head inclined a little to one side, and his bow bantor, the whole pose and the expression of the face being that of a man who is a very disinterested to hear. At the sentence was down, turned immediately, and, with a bow to the Judge, walked out of the court-room with the Clerk. Tracy, as he were discussing a bargain just consummated. After the sentence was pronounced, McQuade stood for a moment facing the Judge, and the faithful friends who had stood by him to the throughout his trial.

WESTERN.

The Cherokee Council has passed an order extending the time for driving cattle in Indian Territory from April 1 to May 1, and also allowing the shipping of timber out of the Territory upon payment of a royalty.

A letter from Sassakawa, Indian Territory, gives an account of the death there of Mrs. Susanna Wampum, probably the oldest woman in the world. She was born in Florida in 1750, and was in her one hundred and thirty-seventh year at the time of her death. She leaves a daughter ninety-seven years of age and many grandchildren.

Factor Jones and Dick Bullock, two of the four negroes who a few days ago murdered George Tate, in the Cherokee Nation, because he discovered them killing his cattle, were found on $10 bail, but were caught by a mob, taken to the scene of the murder, and riddled with bullets, each receiving not less than forty shots. Sandy Smith and George Moss, the other murderers, are in jail awaiting trial.

Superintendent Whitehead, of the Milwaukee Humane Society, has officially condemned the special manner in which beeves are slaughtered when the meat is to be used by orthodox Jews, and hints that unless a more merciful mode is put into practice prosecutions will follow. The Hebrews are indignant over the matter.

Barbara Elizabeth Grund, aged 16, daughter of a well-known citizen of St. Louis, died from hydrophobia. She had been slightly bitten some time ago by a puppy two months old, but nothing was thought of the occurrence.

SOUTHERN.

Judge Duffy, of Baltimore, Md., impressed a reporter named Morris for exposing grand jury proceedings.

James Howard, aged 25, imprisoned at Texarkana for brutal treatment of his 14-year-old wife, was taken from jail and hanged to a railway trestle. With a red-hot live-stock brand Howard had branded the letter "H" in two places on his wife's person.

A stake of $50,000, to be run for on the Lonsdale Jockey Club's track, has been arranged for the spring of 1889.

Mr. Gaston Washburne, son of the Hon. E. B. Washburne, of Chicago, dropped dead in a Louisville hotel.

The Louisiana Board of Liquidation has arranged with two banks in New Orleans to take the accounts of the State and provide for the payment of interest on her consolidated debt.

A Tocoa (Ga.) special says: "The reported burning of Frank Sanders, the murderer of the five members of the swilling family, proved to be incorrect, as he was returned to jail that day by the mob. This morning, however, a party of one hundred and twenty-five men surrounded the Carnesville jail, battered down the door, and took Sanders to a convenient tree in sight and hanged him up. It has developed since that Mrs. Rachel Baty was an accomplice in the crime, and that it was the design of herself and Sanders to get married with the money thus gained. The woman is in jail, and there are fears that one will be taken out to-night and lynched by the same parties."

WASHINGTON.

The United States Supreme Court has granted a motion to advance the important bank-tax case of the Mercantile National Bank against the City of New York, involving the legality of taxes assessed upon the shares of national banks in that city to the amount of $2,000,000. The case is set for argument on the first day after the next February recess.

Father Fahy, the priest who early in September was centenced to six months' imprisonment for refusing to give bail for good behavior, has been unconditionally released from the Galway Jail.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Leading citizens of Eaton, O., hung William Mason, the murderer of David Chapman.

All the details of the lynching were arranged in advance, and at 9 in the City Hall the wounded criminal was brought and which was made up of the leading citizens of the place. Four of the escort's friends who had been detained for that purpose, capured Mason, dragged and held him prisoner in a hack. The party then proceeded to the jail, built red fire in front of the jail, and then broke in Mason's cell. Mason denied having killed Christmas, and said, "If you are going to hang me be quick about it." Men were sent for some one to identify him, and this being done the rope was put on his neck and he was hoisted up by a circular light tower, in the prisoner's cell. The torn, wizened face was again given an opportunity to smile. He again declared his innocence and asked that his body be buried, and that his mother and sisters be given to his wife. The hanging was done by a mob of 1000 men, and the prisoner's death was quick, and but a brief struggle ensued. The crowd, in expectation of a confession, had Manuel again called on to make one. "Tell the rope" was the order, and in an instant the rope was cut and the body fell. At this sight the crowd gave vent to its delirious by hand-clapping and shouting, which lasted for half a minute, during which time hundreds of women and children gathered about to see the dead man cut down and given to the undertaker.

Schaefer Defeats Sosoon in the Second Championship Game at Cushion Carrom.

Some Fine Playing—Scenes and Incidents in the Crowded Hall.

Central Music Hall was packed from pit to gallery, Friday evening, with people who had assembled to witness the great cushion-carrom match between George Sloson, of Chicago, and Jacob Schaefer, of St. Louis, the two billiard champions of the world, says the Chicago Daily News. Among the assemblage were many ladies, and the private boxes presented a fine appearance. Promptly at 8 o'clock, "Colonel" John Mc. Mackenzie, of St. Louis, stepped forward and introduced the champions with a few timely remarks. The speaker briefly announced the conditions of the game, which were 1,000 points, 18 points for fifteen balls and all the table receipts. The men lost no time in getting down to business. Both stripped of their coats and appeared in dark knit jackets. A moment later they were down on their cues in the character was by an English or an Irish. In the eighth inning Schaefer, in a fine stroke, made the balls form a cross, and, nine with the balls in the upper left hand corner of the table, he rattled up the counts at a surprising rate of speed for cushion carrom

JACOB SCHAEFER.

Some of his shots barely moved the balls, and yet they all went to the cushion in order to reach the mark. The delivery of play surprised even the most knowing ones, and a murmur of admiration ran through the crowded auditorium as he kept on counting. For a while Sloson seemed a little rattled, but after a few singles and a nine or two he began to creep up.

GEORGE SLOSSON.

Sloson would keep plodding along until he had a good chance, and then he would make up for the better would wake up and go speeding along with a nine or two. In the 19th inning Schaefer had a fine run of 19, making a great variety of shots were thrown in, and the audience was delighted. In the 21st inning he made frequent bursts of applause when any surprising shot was made, and in the 23d he had a fine run of 18, which was followed by a fine run by Schaefer in the 25th inning. This put the game well in the hands of the latter. In the 27th inning he made a fine run of 17, and in the 28th inning he made a run of 18. At this sight the crowd gave vent to its delirium by hand-clapping and also went to its feet in a left hanging an hour, during which time hundreds of women and children gathered about to see the man who had cut down and given to the undertaker.

A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Lincoln was introduced and passed. The House then went into committee of the whole on the Senate bill to provide for the transfer of the capital stock of certain railroads to the United States, a call for silence was made, which hush fell over the crowd in expectation of a confession, but Manuel again said he was innocent. "Pull the rope!" was the order, and in an instant the rope was cut and the body fell. At this sight the crowd gave vent to its delirium by hand-clapping and also went to its feet in a left hanging an hour, during which time hundreds of women and children gathered about to see the man who had cut down and given to the undertaker.

WALKING TO HIS GRAVE.

An Indiana Man Kept in Perpetual Motion by a Spinal Disease.

A Strange Case That Excites Widespread Interest Among the Medical Fraternity.

[Wabash (Ind.) letter.]

John Snider, Indiana's walking man, is a dead curiosity and no mistake.

Snider lives one mile south of Mill Grove, a small station on the Pan-Handle Railway, in the eastern part of Blackford County. Your correspondent found him industriously performing his heel-and-toe act. His home is a one-story log-cabin located in the center of an acre lot. Around the house a beaten path, worn fully one inches below the surface, indicates the route pursued by Snider in his weary and almost ceaseless tramp. To vary the monotony of his tramp, Snider has two other promenades, both in the rear of the dwelling, circular in form and ninety feet in diameter. During the past three months Snider has walked incessantly out of doors, through rain, sleet, and snow; but, as the expression had begun to tell on him, his relatives fixed up a room in the cabin for his pedestrian exercises.

Two years ago last April Snider, then a robust man of fifty-four, while at work in a field, was seized with a spasmodic twitching of his arms and hands and severe cramping of the muscles of the body. He was incapacitated for labor of any kind, and his physician diagnosed a case of spinal concussion, and pronounced the case a most serious one. After a few days of pain, the cramping of nervous derangement disappeared, and for a week Snider was apparently as well as ever. Then the muscular convulsions again manifested themselves, and at the time in the legs. He lost control of both legs, and the property to walk, which will eventually carry rander to the grave, took complete possession of him, and with the exception of about four hours each day, from 1 to 5 o'clock a. m., he is constantly on his feet and traveling at the rate of four miles an hour.

At 5 o'clock in the morning, after a sleep of three to four hours, Snider begins his day's tramp and continues it, rain, sleet, or hail, or snow, or sunshine, or fog, all the weather, until one o'clock the following morning, when he sits down in a chair and sleeps soundly, being unable to rest in a recumbent position.

At the outset his friends endeavored by force to induce him to remain quiet, but he immediately became frantic, and will tears in his eyes the patient begged to be released and allowed to pass. A bill was placed in the State asylum at Indianapolis for a lunatic, but the commitment by the authorities of the Hoosier institution was refused. He is perfectly rational, but talks but little about his condition. Money has no particular value to his taxpayer interest.

The walker has had no trouble and partly endeavors him-elf, and that his physicians have failed to find a cure for his malady and death claimed him. When Snider began his tramp he weighed 200 pounds, he now weighs 150 pounds, and has not an ounce of superfluous flesh. His muscles are hard and firm. He has fully recovered from a recent attack of pneumonia, which was thought to be dying. He walks with a quick step of uniform length, striking his heels into the soil each time, the shock being separately a painful one to his nervous system.

At times Snider sleeps as he walks, and for an hour, guided by relatives, he swings around the circle, seeing lovely, and upon awakening he runs at a rapid gait for several miles, to "fall into line." As he says, Snider suffers no pain, and is apparently contented with his condition.

Dr. Davidson, of Hartford City, who is Snider's family physician, has complete charge of the case. He says the recovery is impossible, Snider would probably live for many months. "The disease is diagnosed as the spinal cord." said the Doctor, "and from the hips down it is paralyzed. Nutrition is not subject to government by the brain, but by the spinal cord."

In October Snider was placed behind a plow in a field and quite far progress for a time, but when the plow struck a hidden root and stopped, Snider, instead of attempting it, let go of the handles, walked around the horse, and set off alone on his regular tramp. It is estimated that during the two years he has been walking, Snider has traveled 25,000 miles.

The case excites widespread interest among the medical fraternity, many members of which have visited Snider at his home, diagnosing the disease about half way with him, as he is unable to stop even for a moment. His case is said by physicians to be unparalleled, and his powers of endurance unequaled.

M. RENE GOBLET.

The Ex-Premier Succumbs to a Wretched Cold, Followed by Pneumonia.

Monsieur Rene Goblet was born at Ainesur-la-Lys in 1828 and began life as a lawyer at Amiens. He was elected to the National Assembly in 1871, and in that body rapidly made himself a reputation as an orator. In 1876 he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies, to which body he was returned in 1881 and 1885 and in the following year He gained the enmity of M. Jules Ferry, by his bill for the prohibition of "clerical" last year. Rene Goblet, formerly a protege of Gambetta, is said to be a secret ally of Clemenceau. He was Minister of Public Instruction in the Cabinet which preceded the one which was defeated in the first week of December, 1886. In the year 1892 he was Minister of the Interior. M. Goblet is a jovial man of liberal views, having founded a Walks at Amiens in 1866 the liberal journal styled Le Progres de la Somme. He is an entertaining anti-clerical views.

A FAMOUS HUMORIST.

Alexander E. Sweet, of the Texas Siftings.

A New York dispatch states that A. E. Sweet's new play has been fully rehearsed and that it will prove a big success. Alex. E. Sweet is the funny man of Texas Siftings, and is 46 years of age, and moved from Austin, Tex., to New York three years ago. His blossoming out as a playwright brings him prominently before the public once more. The play is said to be very funny, and deals with the doings of Col. Sinett, a typical Texas editor.

MANNING DEFENDS HIMSELF.

Our Minister at Mexico Denies the Charges Made Against Him.

[New Orleans telegram.]

A morning paper prints the following letter from Minister Manning, dated at the City of Mexico on the 14th inst., and addressed to Mr. Percy Roberts:

MY DEAR SIR—Rewriting as the subject is to be discussed and settled by the slanderous and malicious correspondents of the Mexican and American newspapers. The crusade against me is one which I have long expected, and which I have prepared for. I have not been in any bend, at which were a large number of Mexicans, and I have drank. The actual facts, which will, I trust, be published in full, are as follows:

Mr. Gorman, a young man, formerly of New Orleans, who was engaged extensively in the business of the Mexican Central, and who had occasion to transact business with me, was at his request, introduced to me by a friend. Gorman was in his office, and I invited him to come to my house, where I was living with my family, and to take a seat at my table. He accepted the invitation, and I introduced him to the members of the family and to the guests of the house. He was a young man of considerable ability, and I was very well pleased with the acquaintance. He was very fond of the ladies, and I thought he was a good deal of a gentleman. He was a good deal of a gentleman. He was a good deal of a gentleman. He

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The Eaton Rapids Journal celebrated Christmas by an enlargement to seven columns to each page,—eight pages.

The Chicago underwriters estimate losses by recent storms at $1,500,000. A total of 57 vessels have passed out of existence. During the season of 1886 there were 138 persons drowned on the lakes, including accidental cases.

The suit against the Pennsylvania anthracite coal pool threatens to end in a farce. The railroad magnates refuse to testify. Nothing short of a French revolution is likely to bring these men to any terms with the public. They have got their feet upon the necks of the people, and there they will stay.

The bright, sunny Christmas morning will not bring gladness to the 50,000 people who invested in the Redmond opera house lottery at Grand Rapids. The drawing took place last evening and Mr. Redmond himself held the lucky number. When Redmond decided to raffle the opera house he was heavily in debt. He sold 50,000 tickets, most of them at $2 apiece; cleared the house of mortgages, paid all the expenses of advertising, has about $80,000 cash, and now resumes active control of the theater. Such is luck—Detroit Journal.

A curious case of color blindness has occurred in Washington. While Frederick Douglass was recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, the republicans never discovered that the fees of the office amounted to $12,000 or $15,000 a year. Since President Cleveland appointed Matthews, a democrat colored man, the extravagance and extortion of the system is now seen in all its horrors. So there is talk of making it a salaried office and turning the fees into the treasury. However, the reform is a good one. There is no reason for making the public pay the officer, be he democrat or republican, two or three times the value of his services.

On Jan. 1st the Lansing Journal is to appear in a new dress, printed on a new press. The Journal has always been well printed although a portion of the type has had nearly twenty years of constant service, and the press on which it has been printed was brought from Washington as a second hand machine to print the territorial laws before Michigan became a state, and has probably had sixty years of service. With the new outfit the proprietors will establish a live democratic daily,—something long needed at the capital. There is some vigorous young blood in the business and editorial departments of the Journal, and we understand that the enterprise is to be backed by sufficient capital to make it worthy the support of democracy of all parts of the state. Of its success and permanency we have not a particle of doubt.

Ovid N. Case of Detroit died at his home on the 20th instant. Mr. Case was a young man but was well known throughout the state, and was highly respected among all classes. He was indeed a self made man. Being a farmer boy he earned with his own hands and obtained a good education and was admitted to the bar in 1877. At once he commenced the practice of his profession in the county of Eaton, where by hard work, integrity, and close attention to business, in two years he acquired a very enviable record at the Eaton county bar. In 1879 he moved to Detroit, and has become a very successful lawyer. He represented Detroit in the legislature in '83, '85, and was re-elected in November last. In the death of Mr. Case Michigan loses an honorable and much respected citizen; the bar loses a trustworthy and able member; democracy loses a constant and conscientious supporter, and all lovers of justice and equal rights to all, lose an earnest and energetic advocate and legislator.

THE PRESIDENT'S DANGER.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—The death of Senator Logan from rheumatism has caused people to direct attention to the illness of President Cleveland, who suffers from the same trouble. Mr. Cleveland, while probably not dangerously ill is not so well as it is generally reported. It is known that he has been confined to his room for several days, after being about the house for a short time, subsequent to an attack which kept him on his back for more than a week. The president's condition on Saturday was not such as to permit his visiting Oak View, where the family were to take a Christmas dinner with Mrs. Folsom. The president remained in his room all day suffering intensely, the pains being located principally in one knee. Col. and Mrs. Lamont were substituted for him at the home of Mrs. Cleveland's mother. It is not generally believed that there is any danger of a fatal termination of the president's indisposition.

SENATOR LOGAN DEAD.

Gen. John A. Logan, U. S. senator from Illinois, died at his home in Washington, Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, of acute rheumatism, with brain complications. He was attended during the closing moments by his family, private secretary, and numerous political and military associates. (We shall expect the full details and a sketch of his life on our inside pages next week.)

Who is Governor?

Millionaire McMillin evidently made himself solid with Lince before he spent his thousands to elect him. We have already mentioned that McMillin obliged Lince to go back on his promise to Wm. A. French to appoint him commissioner of railroads.

The granger (?) governor was not embarrassed by appointing McMillin's man mail after the state grange had met at Lansing and re-elected Luce, but the next day the great railroad magnate went down to Lansing in his private car to see the governor-elect.

Instead of going to see Luce he had Luce come to see him, and a secret conference took place in the car. As the result of that conference the papers announced the appointment of John T. Rich a couple of days afterward. Farmers, how do you like Gov. McMillan?—Harbor Springs Independent.

The Great German Doctor.

The remarkable power in the practice of Dr. Peter W. Schmidt frequently called Dr. Peter, he never asked one to describe their disease, his intuitive perceptions being so strong he can tell any one their trouble without asking a question. His success is phenomenal. His practise enormous. He is sought after by hundreds wherever he goes, because he cures when every physician and remedy has failed. The giving of his great medicine, Golden Seal Bitters, which has made his great success, to the world mark a new era in medicine. Blood, liver, kidney and stomach disorders yield to this master of disease and its wonderful cures are regarded as phenomenal, but the germ of fa[illegible] cure says "What has been may be again." We say to the sick and discouraged give Golden Seal Bitters a trial. It is all we ask. They will speak for themselves. Sold by Ferry Weed, and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

AYER'S Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but with no success. Indeed, what little hair I had was all growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Clapp, Foxboro, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, thin, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the hair, depend upon the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. In the case of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. The use of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. H. Fox, Milwaukee, Wis.

Our attention has been called to the fact that there has been some wrangling with the property of the fire department, sentiment being that it is done to cripple the department. One rubber coat is missing, and there has been some tampering with the apparatus, which, had it not been discovered, would have seriously delayed the work of getting water on the fire, had there been one.

At Thanksgiving time everybody bought turkeys. Dealers bought heavily in advance, and citizens bought of farmers who peddled their stock from house to house. As a consequence dealers find part of their stock left, at considerable loss to themselves. Last Friday the situation was changed. Dealers concluded not to invest very much, and the accommodating farmer didn't show up, so the citizen, after hustling around to all the markets, concluded to be satisfied with roast beef, instead of turkey.

While both Charlevoix papers have made careful reports of the shipments from this port from year to year, no attention has been given to goods received and reported at the custom house. Deputy collector Eaton has just made a summary of the business, in and out, for the past season, from which we take the following receipts: Wheat, 400 bu.; corn, 6,680 bu.; oats, 9,414 bu.; feed, 255 tons; hay, 253 tons; merchandise, 270 tons; kero sene oil, 305 bbls.; coal, 1,089 tons; shingles, 200,000; lath, 75,000; brick, 18,000; iron ore, 7,976 tons; beer, 429 bbls. Total tonnage entered, 62,952; total tonnage cleared, 63,124.

Christmas at the Churches.

At the Congregational church a "stack's Ladder" was constructed, reaching nearly to the ceiling, on the rounds of which were hung the presents, consisting of pop-corn, candy, and small toys for the children of the Sunday-school. The exercises consisted of songs, recitations, and responsive readings, and the evening passed very pleasantly.

The exercises at the M. E. church were well gotten up in every particular, the recitations and songs by the scholars of the Sunday school indicating considerable practice. The boy's band played one selection. Superintendent Buttars being absent E. H. Green acted in his place. The usual suspension bridge was well constructed and was tastefully decorated with the presents. Every child of the Sunday school was remembered with a card or a book and a bag of candy. In the middle of the church was suspended a large Christmas bell. A big stocking for the pastor was well filled with presents from the members of the church, and the elder asserts that he had to get a man to help carry it to the parsonage. The occasion will long be remembered by the children of the school as a very pleasant one.

Charging for Conversation.

Dr. Older, a dentist of this city, has a well-earned reputation, not alone for skillful dentistry, but for a charger of marvelous capacity. One day this week a patient of the doctor got his bill. Of course, he fell back, stupefied. Older's patients do, until they get used to it.

"He has charged $15 an hour," cried the wretched man, "and when I call on him he talks for twenty minutes about the weather, and politics, and his last new girl, and I am paying for that all the time."

He called on the dentist and expressed his opinion that it was not right, and that his time should not be charged when so much of it was consumed in conversation.

Dr. Older heard him gravely to the end. "You remember," he said, when the indignant patient was concluded, "that I told you upon my preliminary examination that the nerve of the tooth was affected. You do? Good. Now, I know my business. So I soothe your nerves and cast you into a pleasant frame of mind before touching an instrument. Do you understand now?"

"But, great heavens! am I to pay you $7.50 to hear you talk about Miss B's bangs, and this actress, and that dude?"

"It had the proper effect," said the dentist, calmly. "It quieted your nerves, and I must say," he added, with some pique, "that you are the first of my patients who ever considered my conversation dear at that price." The patient signed deeply, and signed the check.—San Francisco Post.

New Discovery in Glass.

Berlin papers copy from the Germania the account of an important discovery in glass manufacture made by Friedrich Siemens of Dresden. He has succeeded in casting glass in the same way as molten metal is cast, and obtaining an article corresponding to cast iron. This cast glass is hard, not denser in production than cast iron, and has the advantage of transparency, so that defaults can be detected before it is applied to practical use. It will be much less exposed to injury from atmospheric influence than iron. The process of production is not difficult, the chief feature being rapid cooling. The hardness and resisting power of this cast glass are so great that experiments are just now being carried out at the Siemens glass foundry at Dresden with the purpose of ascertaining whether the material could be employed for rails on railways.—London Times.

☞Demorest's Monthly is a fine family magazine. In the January number is added a new department, "Our Girls," which will show this portion of the family "some ways of getting the best out of life." The "Household" department is not merely a series of receipts, but is full of practical suggestions. A prize is here offered for the best series of menus for the separate days of the week; and under the head of "Home Art and Home Comfort" another prize is here offered "for the most practical suggestion of remunerative work for women, to be done at home." Many women will watch anxiously to see what this offer will bring forth, as information on this point is just what they are looking for. The stories and sketches are of a high order, handsomely illustrated and very interesting. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 17 East 14th street, New York.

☞Our readers should not overlook the advertisement of Mrs. Frank Leslie which appears in this paper. The proprietor of this well-known and enterprising publishing house offers a splendid statuette of Bartholdi's "Liberty," free of charge, to every subscriber to the Illustrated Newspaper or the Popular Monthly, or for two subscriptions to the Sunday Magazine. Each of these publications have hosts of old readers and friends in all parts of the country, who do not need to be told that they are among the very best issued. The statuette is an exact fac-simile of the colossal figure in New York Harbor, of the same material, and is an exceedingly pretty and effective parlor or mantle ornament—"not for a day, but for all time." Mrs. Leslie, with her usual enterprise, has secured absolute control, for premium purposes, of the statuette, and it will be offered by no other publisher. The Frank Leslie Publications are all of a high order of excellence, and enjoy well-deserved popularity.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

Remarks of Chicago's Mayor Before the Nineteenth Century Club of New York.

Results of Eight Years' Experience as Chief Officer of a Great City.

The following is the address by Hon. Carter H. Harrison, Mayor of Chicago, on "Municipal Government," before the Nineteenth Century Club of New York, on the 23d of November, which has provoked such wide unanimity and comment:

In many years there have been constantly reports in the newspapers of the waste and extravagance of municipal governments throughout the country, and every now and then the people have been startled by the announcement in some city of malfeasance, peculation, if not downright robbery, by municipal officials. The people, too, have noted that there has been a constant tendency of population toward great centers. Farmers tilt their land by their own labor and that of their children, with each mile as they go out from local laborers of foreign birth. American-born youth seem to disdain being here as farm-hands.

The farm-s'ad, who formerly looked forward with longing to the attainment of his majority that he might spark a girl and vote for the President of the United States free from parental restraint, now does so in the hope of seeking the city, there to imitate Gould or a Vanderbilt, and make h a fortune and capture it in the young enterprise of his life. The dissolute and idle, the ambitious and designing, with the vicious and criminal young, naturally seek to desire residence where they may be most easily concealed.

Crime can be more easily perpetrated in the country than in the city. The farmer's house can be burglarized more easily than can city residences on the crowded thoroughfares. Vice can hide in the country districts, and in the sparsely settled country than in the cities. The criminal has learned that while it may be nearly impossible to find a needle in a hay-stack, yet that perseverance and patience with a lamp and sieve, can at length recover the needle. The country is not free from the bad, but has a bolder type of bad among a hundred thousand other bad. Crime is committed in a like metal and cut by the same machine, would be absolutely impossible of detection and identification. He recognizes that his safest stealing place is in the city, where successes of his compeers, among whom his identification will be difficult, unless from his own experience or the treachery of his pals.

Thus, not only does population tend generally toward cities, but the leaders of the adventurous, the reckless, the idle, and vicious, are constantly drawn from the country toward the cities of population. This tendency toward centralization has been vastly increased since the close of the great war which came so near shaking our Government into fragments.

The heterogeneous masses thrown into cities are supposed to be in any persons unable to choose their rulers and magistrates. To escape the effect of this, many of the best inhabitants of cities have been willing that they should be governed by the Legislature of their State and by its Governor, instead of by their own citizens. Home in New York Government was tried, and proved an ignominious failure.

You are half governed by yourselves and half at Albany, and have been so disinterested that you have been robbed almost into bankruptcy by your Legislature. Your Legislature, they say, to have its sessions, must have its time drawn from the farms and the fields, however capable in the science of deep-ploughing and scientific farming, however capable of fatting up to prize bisnes of beeves, and devoted to, however skilled in rearing the ram as the rainbow colors, yet were untried to judge of the delicate questions of the denizens of large cities, and how they should be governed. It is a fair number that the average term of a city is a dozen Legislators of the State, and yet, though honest men, though honest men. It would be very difficult to purchase the majority of large body of the lowest, while the latter could be easily made the tools of a few self-seeking rascals.

Thus it happens that the Legislature the fall tire of the experiment. It ought to have failed; for it was in violation of the very essential principles of our system of government, in disregard of the genius of our institutions, which claim that men should be governed by those of their choice.

This experiment proving a failure, some good men have jumped to the conclusion that the demonstration of this sought be trusted with their own government, provided the right of suffrage should be indefinitely abridged, but by taking from any man the right to vote, but by giving to some men a commutative vote in proportion to their property. This, they think, will make the ballot more conservative, and therefore more wise. This, too, would be in violation of every spirit of free government, which rests the suffrage upon manhood, and not upon property. Property has its rights, and not found that a fopd are in any law as are because of quadruped sees filing his stalls, or that a hobbed is any less a blockhead because, by patience and hoarding, by prudence or luck, he has become the owner of blocks of brick and mortar. My own observations are that the man who rears a fortune by toying cheap by the bale and selling dear by the yard—but the man who lays off by the car-load and sell it by the pound—how, by patience and prudence, he rears a fortune in commodities and the prospect of earning, is no too valuable a better judgment human nature of the intelligence and capabilities of men than the porter who rolls his bale or the truckman who hauls his sack—than the salesman who sells and ties up the yard or the pound. Your princely merchants are no more skilled in reading human nature—aye, not half so much so as are their domestics, and the laundress, men whose bread comes from a knowledge of human nature. Besides, property and wealth oftentimes corrupt a man's views instead of enlarging them. Poverty is a school-master sharper his skill and quicker his perceptions.

I can not agree with the distinguished gentleman (Mr. Irish) who has just concluded his able lecture, when he says: "It is—can to quote 2 Sermon and the "Adores they spoke for their time and a state of facts which were familiar to them, not for our day and a con fition of things they never dreamed of." Jefferson and the fathers spoke not that which grows old, and not for a part—that which is true for all age, and not for a time—which is ever fresh and vigorous—the truth, which is eternal. Jefferson and the fathers knew that government was for the greatest good to the greatest number—injuring none. That the governed were the best judges of their own needs, and should and could be trusted with the management of their own affairs.

The tendencies of all governments are to one or the other of two things—toward centralization, consolidation, greater strength and ultimate despotism, or toward decentralization, greater weakness and ultimate anarchy. Both extremes are to be avoided. The despotism of the one man tumbles into the despotism of the mob. The despotism of the mob ends in the despotism of the one strong man. It is the part of statesmanship to so guide Government as to retard the march toward these, their logical tendencies, to stave off the evil day, so as to make the rule of happiness as long as possible.

It is a mistake, however, that we are not as other men have been, and that our governmental fabric is not controlled by the universal law of growth and decay. Decay sets in immediately when growth ceases. Men are today what men were a thousand years ago, and what they will be a thousand years hence, modified only by circumstances, and strong and irresistibly controlled by the same irrevocable laws. Governments are but agencies, tools of men, and subject to the same logical forces.

Our Government will follow other Governments it will grow and then decay. Our experiment was a grand appeal, but it was Webster's great appeal to humanity, and the echoes of it will be heard and felt for years to come, and many generations will follow us happy in our country's growth, and then its decay will be in the dim and far-off future. To make our hope realize, let us to to the meetings pointed out to us by Jefferson and the fathers. We are authorized upon the people. When our anchorage ceases to be trusted, then will the ties have set in and our grand heritage will no longer give us a land of freedom. The people are a long, long, long way from that point, but their sober second thought is that we have gone far enough. They are sick and drunk and prostrated, but we can appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober. We can appeal to the wisdom of the ages, to the experience of mankind, if not consumed, by the learned of his day, but the people know it, and now the world concedes that the people were true to the principles of Jefferson and true to man. In the dark days from 1861 to 1865 carping critics jangled at and doubted Lincoln. The people put their trust in old Abe, and now the world concedes, with each mile as they go out from local laborers of foreign birth. American-born youth seem to disdain being here as farm-hands.

The farm-s'ad, who formerly looked forward with longing to the attainment of his majority that he might spark a girl and vote for the President of the United States free from parental restraint, now does so in the hope of seeking the city, there to imitate Gould or a Vanderbilt, and make h a fortune and capture it in the young enterprise of his life. The dissolute and idle, the ambitious and designing, with the vicious and criminal young, naturally seek to desire residence where they may be most easily concealed.

Crime can be more easily perpetrated in the country than in the city. The farmer's house can be burglarized more easily than can city residences on the crowded thoroughfares. Vice can hide in the country districts, and in the sparsely settled country than in the cities. The criminal has learned that while it may be nearly impossible to find a needle in a hay-stack, yet that perseverance and patience with a lamp and sieve, can at length recover the needle. The country is not free from the bad, but has a bolder type of bad among a hundred thousand other bad. Crime is committed in a like metal and cut by the same machine, would be absolutely impossible of detection and identification. He recognizes that his safest stealing place is in the city, where successes of his compeers, among whom his identification will be difficult, unless from his own experience or the treachery of his pals.

Thus, not only does population tend generally toward cities, but the leaders of the adventurous, the reckless, the idle, and vicious, are constantly drawn from the country toward the cities of population. This tendency toward centralization has been vastly increased since the close of the great war which came so near shaking our Government into fragments.

The heterogeneous masses thrown into cities are supposed to be in any persons unable to choose their rulers and magistrates. To escape the effect of this, many of the best inhabitants of cities have been willing that they should be governed by the Legislature of their State and by its Governor, instead of by their own citizens. Home in New York Government was tried, and proved an ignominious failure.

You are half governed by yourselves and half at Albany, and have been so disinterested that you have been robbed almost into bankruptcy by your Legislature. Your Legislature, they say, to have its sessions, must have its time drawn from the farms and the fields, however capable in the science of deep-ploughing and scientific farming, however capable of fatting up to prize bisnes of beeves, and devoted to, however skilled in rearing the ram as the rainbow colors, yet were untried to judge of the delicate questions of the denizens of large cities, and how they should be governed. It is a fair number that the average term of a city is a dozen Legislators of the State, and yet, though honest men, though honest men. It would be very difficult to purchase the majority of large body of the lowest, while the latter could be easily made the tools of a few self-seeking rascals.

Thus it happens that the Legislature the fall tire of the experiment. It ought to have failed; for it was in violation of the very essential principles of our system of government, in disregard of the genius of our institutions, which claim that men should be governed by those of their choice.

This experiment proving a failure, some good men have jumped to the conclusion that the denizens of cities ought be trusted with their own government, provided the right of suffrage should be indefinitely abridged, but by taking from any man the right to vote, but by giving to some men a commutative vote in proportion to their property. This, they think, will make the ballot more conservative, and therefore more wise. This, too, would be in violation of every spirit of free government, which rests the suffrage upon manhood, and not upon property. Property has its rights, and not found that a fopd are in any law as are because of quadruped sees filing his stalls, or that a hobbed is any less a blockhead because, by patience and hoarding, by prudence or luck, he has become the owner of blocks of brick and mortar. "Well," she said, "did you do anything?"

"Yes, my dear, we outlined a program," he said with an air of business.

"What is it like?"

"Well, the chief feature is to be a play."

"What play?"

"Just the thing for amateurs, my dear; the pretty little three-act comedy, 'Married life.'"

GRANDFATHER'S BREECHES

"The past season was the most significant one in fifty years as far as men's fashions are concerned," said an up-town tailor, "because it showed that the old time and all sufficient dress suit was living in hold. Men have grown restive under the severe and rigid dress suit rules of former years. They are moving toward more elaborate costumes, and they'll get there before long, too.

"I've watched the restlessness of the dress suit," he continued slowly, "with great care, for I knew that as soon as the deadlock was broken it would only be a question of time when knickerbockers, buckled shoes and ruffles would come in. The first indication was a broad satin or silk collar and lapel for the evening coat. This made a stir at first, but now three-fourths of my clients have silk or satin lapels on their coats. Then came wide waist coats—at first very simple, but this season made of figured silks of really gaudy patterns, and further decorated with gold buttons. Many of the buttons had the monogram of the wearer wrought on them, and some had crests. Then came a very significant change—the triumph of pleated, stamped, ribbed and decorated shirt fronts. They became almost universal before the season ended. The straight collars of a few seasons ago were replaced by rolling collars, and the little shoestring ties by broad black or white bands. Then the coat-tails were rounded off and made smaller, and the coat drawn in at the waist like the coats of the eighteenth century. I saw the way things were tending, and built my home of my shoulders well great success.

"The trousers were then decorated with broad satin bands, and your fashionable man of '86 was properly clad. Add very low pumps, colored hose, and the latest twinkle from the Prince of Wales—a bright red, blue, or yellow silk handkerchief thrust into the open waistcoat front—and everything was complete. These are small things in detail, but very important as indicating the bent of fashion. A plainly dressed man of two seasons ago is eclipsed by the dandy of today, with his showy shirt front, dash of color in handkerchief and hose, delicately tinted waistcoat, loosely tied cravat, and high-shouldered tight-waisted coat."

"And you think all this precedes knee breeches?"

"Society tennis and bicycling have shown a great many men how becoming knee breeches are. They are infinitely more graceful than trousers, if a man has any sort of a leg at all. No man wears knee breeches when he plays tennis because they are comfortable, because they are cool. The stockings irritate, are exceedingly warm, and the garters above the knee are no end of a nuisance. A pair of loose flannel trousers are infinitely more comfortable and convenient. But the mind of man is bent on knee breeches, and the influence of woman goes with it. Men now wear knickerbockers in the country, though they never touch a tennis racket or throw a leg over a wheel. It is the result of the desire to look picturesque. The Duc de Morny's set in Paris has gone a step further than New York in the matter of evening attire. They now wear—or at least did during the season—pearl-gray trousers and bluish dress coats with gold buttons. When our young society men get to that point, and it would not surprise me to see it done next season, I can dress a shapely man so that he will be fit to stand comparison with the dandies of the last century."—N. Y. Sun.

Missed Wealth by Eight Feet.

Fifteen years ago C. J. Brand, the well-known jeweler of this city, says the Nevada (Cal.) Gem, saunted his father-in-law, Mr. Thoss, now deceased, to open up a quartz mine in Calaveras county. The vein was a strong one, remarkably well defined, and on the surface was rich, yielding as high as $210 per ton. They erected a mill and expended considerable money in fitting up a plant for permanent working. After sinking down to a considerable depth and taking out a number of thousands of dollars the ledge began to change from heavily auriferous ore to coarse barren quartz. The lessee pitched to the east, and, according to the mining rule, the pay chute should have pitched to the north. Supposing that they had gone through the south corner of the chute, instead of drifting north, they sank a shaft farther up the hill, northward. Here they found no ore, and, after spending considerable money, they started another shaft still farther north, and with the same result as before. Finally, after prospecting for nearly two years, they were obliged to abandon their enterprise. Mr. Thoss died, and Brand spent all the money he had, and, besides, had worked like a slave for two years. They became involved in debt. Mr. Thoss property was sold at sheriff's sale and the family was broken up, so far as their financial affairs were concerned.

For twelve years the mine lay unclaimed, and was considered worthless. Two or three years ago parties who probably had not learned in history relocated it and commenced the work of development. They started a tunnel farther down the hill on the south, and, after running a distance of three hundred feet, cut the ledge. It has developed into one of the best pieces of mining property in the country. The vein is about three feet thick, and the ore shipped from it has been selling in San Francisco for $80 per ton. Joseph Olive, of this city, has just returned from the mine, where he has been putting up reduction-works, and he says it promises to be a bonanza. But the thing that interests Mr. Brand most is that the point where the bonanza was rediscovered is just eight feet south of where he put in his last blast, and at a greater depth. Had he run eight feet farther he would have come into the pay ore and would have learned that the pay chute, instead of following the rule and pitching to the left, forms an exception to the rule and pitches to the right. It is vexatious and mortifying to think that but eight feet of tunneling between financial ruin and independent riches, and a fortune was lost through too close adherence to mining rules. Gold is where you find it.

Fatal Effects of Alcohol.

According to Dr. Richardson, alcohol cuts down by disease, in England and Wales alone, 1,000 persons a week. What, adds the Doctor, if not other cause of mortality did the same? What if 1,000 persons per week died, in the same area, from the bite of the rabid dog or the snake, by the swallowing of prussic, opium, or poison acid? What if some thousand persons a week were known to be killed by the secret devices of the slow poisoner, who, under the guise of friendship, went about and insinuated into his victims some subtile drop which led to the shortening of their life and to the production of lingering organic fatal disease? What, indeed, then would be the cry and the action? Why, all through the ranks of the great profession of medicine there would be a tumult of labor and toil, such as never before was seen, to remove the calamity. Men would be ambitious to be first to discover by experiment, by experience, the cause of so fearful an evil, and to remove it instantly; while he who was the victim over the calamity would be extolled as a illustrious, and, crowned with honor, become a household word from among the children of Esculapius. Yet here one single cause making this deadly havoc, a cause well known and easily removable, in spite of its evils and in face of its easy removal, is permitted to remain in sight with a majority of the army of medicine looking on in apathy, pitying as "poor fools" fanatics who are exclaiming against the fearful powers to uproot it, and sympathizing with the rest of the world, so sharing the calamity as to become spectators in the drama which kills the lives from the participation.—Scientific American.

Durbin Ward's Bluntness.

The late Durbin Ward, says the New York Tribune, was the soul of honesty. He would not even be a party to polite dissimulation. On one occasion, when he was a candidate for United States Senator from Ohio, one of his supporters asked him to be interviewed to an obnoxious legislator whose vote was desirable.

"I don't want to know him," said the old man.

"But all you've got to do is to say you're glad to see him."

"But, d—n it, sir, I'm not glad to see him," and the old man lost his election.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles. 4eow1

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sulf, druggist, Hippus, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters, as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris Texas by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. F. Corley who was so reduced he could not turn in bed or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was had and exhausted over $35.000, and Mr. Brand had spent all the money he had, and, besides, had worked like a slave for two years. They became involved in debt. Mr. Thoss property was sold at sheriff's sale and the family was broken up, so far as their financial affairs were concerned.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage given by Francis A. Doyston to Andrew D. Bradshaw, bearing date the 29th day of April, recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Charlevoix county, Mich., on the 30th day of October, 1886, in Liber 2 of mortgages, on page 264, now owned by him, and he, the said Andrew D. Bradshaw, now exercising the option to him therein given, doth hereby declare the whole principal sum secured by said mortgage to be immediately payable, and there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date hereof, the sum of Eleven Hundred and Seventy-five Dollars and Forty Cents ($1175 40) principal and interest, and the sum of Three dollars and an attorney fee provided by law on foreclosure, and no proceeding, either at law or in equity, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that the premises therein described, to wit: the south half of the south-east quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township Charlevoix county, Michigan, known as the fractional lot five (5), in township three-fourths (3) north of range six (6) west, containing forty acres, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due as aforesaid, and all legal costs and expenses of sale, will be sold at public vendue, at the south door of the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, on the First day of April, A. D. 1887, at one o'clock in the afternoon.

Dated December 29, A. D. 1886.

TEN YEARS AGO, on December 26th, 1875, The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS was founded. It was the pioneer of low-priced journalism in the west. From the first the controlling object of its managers has been that a "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and healthful as its best and highest-priced contemporary. This has been its ideal. How well it has succeeded in this actual attainment of so high a standard is best evidenced in the fact that it now regularly prints and sells over 150,000 papers a day—a larger circulation than that of all other Chicago dailies combined.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is an INDEPENDENT newspaper. It is not partisan. Neither is it a neutral. It is a paper of positive opinion, expressed without fear or favor. It seeks the patronage of people who love country more than party.

The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is the only 2 cent paper in the west that is a member of the Associated Press. It prints ALL THE NEWS.

Sold by all news dealers at two cents per copy. Mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for six dollars per year, or for a shorter term at rate of fifty cents per month. Address Victor F. Lawson, Publisher THE DAILY NEWS, 123 Fifth Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

"I don't want to know him," said the old man.

"But all you've got to do is to say you're glad to see him."

"But, d—n it, sir, I'm not glad to see him," and the old man lost his election.

TAKE A DETROIT DAILY PAPER.

If you are an intelligent wide-awake citizen you probably already subscribe for and read a weekly paper. But Why Wait a Whole Week?

For the news of the world, which you should get every day in the year, and which you can read in a few minutes every night while you are resting from your days work.

You can have a Daily Paper for a very little more than your weekly paper costs you.

TAKE THE DETROIT DAILY

Evening News

And keep posted in

1. The Affairs of the World.
2. The Politics of your State and Country.
3. The Market Prices of your Products.

And on all other subjects which it concerns you to know from day to day.

If you have never read THE EVENING NEWS you have at least heard of it. It is the Cleanest, Brightest, Newiest, Freshest, and Most Independent and Intelligent Daily Paper published in the State of Michigan.

IT IS THE PEOPLE'S PAPER.

Absolutely devoted to their interests, and free from control by political or money-grinding masters. IT TELLS THE TRUTH about everybody and everything, and that the people read it like it, and believe it, is shown by its enormous circulation, which exceeds that of all other Detroit dailies combined. Address,

Cold and stormy.

Thermometer registered 10° below, Dec. 30th.

Miss Cook who has been visiting friends here for a few weeks, goes to Charlevoix this week to visit her sister, Mrs. Geo. Durance.

Miss Emma Jones, formerly of this place, but more recently of Boyne City, is a guest of Mrs. Hudkins for a few days.

Mrs. Syd Slaughter and Miss Lottie Moore are recovering from their recent illness. Mrs. S. was able to be removed home Christmas.

J. T. Wilks' three children, and two nephews who are stopping there, are sick with measles. Miss Wilda Burley is suffering terribly with a felon and Dan Hudkins has lung fever.

Charlie and Dan Hudkins returned from the North Shore before Christmas. They report winter bogun Oct. 18th, and snow eight feet deep before Christmas, so they concluded to stay at home until spring, when they contemplate returning.

Robert Norton was seriously hurt by getting his head between two irons 4 inches apart while in motion. He was taken home and is now recover ing.

The death of Mrs. Healey casts a gloom over the entire community, the more on account of the manner of death. She was supposed to be partially insane on account of many trials which she had encountered during the past few years. She lost two of three children by accident and her husband was killed, in a sawmill. She leaves several children and grand-children. She was buried from the M. E. church, Elder Robinson conducting the services.

Bethel Sunday school district No. 3 was organized Jan. 2, with 28 members. We wish it success.

Postmaster Seaman, of Intermediate, was a guest of his friend J. R. Vance New Year's.

Eveline.

Did you snow off, last Saturday?

There was a dance at Advance, last Friday night.

The sleighing continues good, and the lumbermen are happy.

Odds are very prevalent in this section of the country, during this cold weather.

Mr. James Hillegas has presented his daughters, Miss Dot and Miss Cenna, with a fine new organ.

Dick Lake has gone to Boyne City, where he will be engaged in skidding logs near that place.

The dance at Advance New Years eve was very largely attended. There was also an oyster supper, and a good time is reported.

Singing school is the order of every Saturday night at Advance, which is attracting a good deal of attention.

There is some sickness reported in town which is thought to be diphtheria; but we hope the report is not true.

Rev. J. T. Iddings will preach at the Freeman school house next Sunday, Jan. 9th, at 2:30 p. m.

While Jim Smith, of Advance, was skidding logs the other day, one of his horses caught one of his hind feet in a crack of a log and fell, breaking its leg.

Burgess.

Maud Scott, daughter of Geo. O. Scott, is quite sick.

Mr. Wm. Smith, an Indian that lived near New Chicago, died suddenly last Wednesday.

Mr. Morell Long, of Evangeline, spent part of New Year's day with his friends in Hayes.

School commenced again in district No. 6, after a vacation of four weeks.

District No. 4 commenced again last Monday, Mrs. Goodrich, the teacher's mother, having improved.

Jan. 4, 1887.

A Speculation.

When I am naught to you, dear love—When I say—
Heavy must me from you, as you will some day—
(I know, and you, too, dear, the words are true)
Yet there must die, and there's no bond to you.
That you are mine—no vow before a priest,
No promise wrought by a golden ring;
And when love leaves your heart, then pride, distressed,
Will bid you shun the hearth, lonesome thing
That I, in my folly, sought to bring to you.
And you will send me from you, love. Ah, you!
We know—we know the words I say are true,
And shall not you and I the truth confess?
Blame not the wind I have gone, and we were wrong—
Are strangers yet more strange than we were wrong?
We neither knew the other lived—shall be
Some hours of solitude for you, and then
Some hours—with that soft cheek my lips
So many times have pressed—on that white hand
That lingers now in mine, ere time, sweet, slips
Away, and reverence will come.

Then fanned
By gentle sighs your dear lips softly breathe,
The musts and coulds will flut away, and Fond
Her crime sword, red with Love's blood, shall be sheathed
And in your fancy, dear, Love by your side
Will stand.

There will be tender speech—
Careless flingings with gentle words
Upon your temples, and warm hands that reach
From them to mine, while as the space will be,
And you will think how I love you, love, love, love.

You will remember all my tenderness,
And you will say that I was fond and true,
And that I sought to make life's path
easy for you
And you will wish that I in caresses was yours,
And you will wish the ten caresses was yours,
Then you will, and will, and all the sweetness
These are good things, and the good endures
And in your revery you will half bless
The days—though not the least—that held so much
As fair and sweet as white sweet roses are;
And you will miss the murmured word, the touch
Of lingering finger tips; your mouth will stir
The dreamy smile of tenderness I know
So well; you will wish that Love—not I—might
You back to the sweet hours of long ago,
Then you may even ask yourself why we Did part, and for a moment half forgive
My love that was too fond.

Then you will see
The best in life, that we should parted be,
Love dies! For this some one cannot live,
And with last thought dismiss your revery.
—Lucien Arnold.

THE KITCHEN GARDEN.

Some Useful Points About the Kitchen Garden—Particularly Asparagus, Celery and Onions.

The garden should be open to the sky, and as far as possible unshaded by adjacent trees from the south, east, and common sun. It is even more essential that the trees be long enough and their voracious roots can make their way to the distance of the garden.

Now for the soil. We would naturally suppose that that of Eden was a deep sandy loam, with not much humus in it. Nature has a preference for that soil, and when she propagates it, "sends a sandy loam" accompanied by a more almost drifting sand or stubborn clay. She does everything in the season, wresting from the ocean one of the grandest of her works.

We must again dwell on the principles already emphasized, that soils must be prepared and made to conform to Nature. If too damp, they must be drained; if of too loose a character, they must be made resting on a clay subsoil, they can be improved deepened and enriched from above. If too light, they must be made to be cold and wet in spring, and to bake and crack in summer, they must be made to lighten it and remove its inertia; humus, as we have seen, a light porous soil should be treated like a shortbread. All soils, except the last-named, are much the better for being enriched and deeply ploughed or forked in October or November. This exposes the mould to the sweetening and nutritive influence of the frost, and the fertilizers incorporated with it are gradually transformed into just that condition of plant food which the rootlets take up with the greatest ease and rapidity. A light soil, on the contrary, should not be worked in autumn, but be left intact after the crops are taken from it.

In one respect a light soil and a stiff heavy one should be treated in the same way, but for different reasons. In the first instance fertilizers should be applied in manure on the surface, and rains and the cultivation of the growing crops should be used to carry the richness downward to the roots. The heavy nature of the earth must ever be borne in mind; fertilizers pass through it and disappear, and therefore are applied to the surface to delay this process and enable the roots to obtain as much nutriment as possible during the passage. Equal and even greater advantages are secured by a top-dressing of barn-yard manure and composts to the heaviest of clay. The surface of such soils, left to nature, becomes in hot dry weather like pottery, baking and cracking, shutting off the flow and absorption and preventing all circulation of air about the roots. A top-dressing prevents all this, keeps the surface open and mellow, and supplies not only fertility, but the mechanical conditions that are essential.

If we are now ready to begin, let us begin right. I have not much sympathy with finical, fussy gardening. One of the chief fascinations of gardening is the endless field it affords for skillful sleight of hand, short-cuts, unconventional methods, and experiments. The true gardener soon ceases to be a man of rules, and becomes one of strategy, of expedients. He is prompt to see at the right moment. Like the artist, he is ever seeking and acting upon hints from nature. The man of rules says the 1st of July is the time to set out winter cabbages, and out the plants go, though the sky be brazen and the mercury in the nineties. The gardener has his plants ready, and for a few days watches the sky. At last he perceives that rain is coming; then he sets out his plants, and nature's watering starts them, unwilted, on their new growth.

At the same time I protest against careless, slovenly gardening—ground imperfectly prepared, crooked rows, seed half covered, or covered so deeply that the germs are discouraged long before they reach light. One of the best aids to success is a small compost heap composed equally of manure from the horse-stable, the cow-stable, and of leaves. This should be allowed to stand so long, and be cut down and turned so often, that it becomes like a fine black powder, and is much the better for being kept under shelter from sun and rain.

All who hope to have a permanent garden will naturally think first of asparagus, one of the vegetables that have been longest in cultivation, and one which is justly among the most valued. It was a favorite hundreds of years before the Christian era, and is today growing in popular esteem among civilized peoples.

I will give in brief just what is essential to secure a good and lasting asparagus bed. We can if we choose grow our own plants, and thus be sure of good ones. The seed can be sown in late October or early spring on light rich soil in rows eighteen inches apart. An ounce of seed will sow fifty feet of drill. If the soil is light, cover the seed one inch deep; if heavy, half an inch, pack the ground lightly, and cover the drill with good damp dirt of that fine compost we spoke of, or any fine manure. This gives the young plants a good send-off. By the use of the hoe and hand-weeding keep them scrupulously clean during the growing season, and when the tops are killed by frost mow them off. I should advise cutting two or three seeds to the inch, and then when the plants are three inches high, thinning them out so that they stand four inches apart. You thus insure almost the certainty of good strong plants by autumn, for plants raised as directed are sure to be set and attain vigorous growth, and by most gardeners are preferred to those raised in seed beds.

RICHFIELD SPRINGS.

Every watering-place has a character of its own, and those who have given little thought to this are surprised at the endless variety in the American resorts. But what is even more surprising is the influence that these places have upon the people that frequent them, who appear to change their characters with their surroundings. One woman in her season plays many parts, dashing in one place, reserved in another, now gay and active, now listless and sentimental, not at all the same woman at Newport that she is in the Adirondack camps, one thing at Bar Harbor and quite another at Saratoga or at Richfield. Different tastes, to be sure, are suited at different resorts, but fashion sends a steady procession of the same people on the round of all.

The charm of Richfield Springs is in the character of the landscape. It is a limestone region of gentle slopes and fine lines; and although it is elevated, the general character is refined rather than bold, the fertile valleys in pleasing irregularity falling away from rounded wooded hills in a manner to produce the impression of peace and repose. The lay of the land is such that an elevation of a few hundred feet gives a most extensive prospect, a view of meadows and upland pastures, of lakes and ponds, of forests hanging in dark masses on the limestone summits, of fields of wheat and tops, and of distant mountain ranges. It is scenery that one grows to love, and that responds to one's every mood in variety and beauty. In a whole summer the pedestrian will not exhaust the inspiring views, and the drives through the gracious land, over hills, round the lakes, by woods and farms, increase in interest as one knows them better. The hostelries of the place, year after year, are at a loss for words to convey their peaceful satisfaction.

In this smiling country lies the pretty village of Richfield, the rural character of which is not entirely lost by reason of the hotels, cottages, and boarding-houses which line the broad principal street. In the center of the town is the old Spring House and grounds. When our travelers alighted in the evening at this mansion, they was reminded of an English inn, though it is not at all like an inn in England except in its atmosphere of comfort. The building has rather a colonial character, with its long corridors and pleasant piazzas, built at different times, and without any particular plans except to remain old-fashioned, it is now a big rambling white mass of buildings in the midst of maple-trees, with so many stairs and passages on different levels, and so many nooks and corners, that the stranger is always getting lost in returning to its the luxurious smoking-room when he wants to dine, and opening a door that lets him out into the park when he is trying to go to bed. But there are few hotels in the country where the guests are as well taken care of.

Of course the raison d'etre of being here is the sulphur spring. There is no doubt of its efficacy. I suppose it is as unpleasant as any in the country. Everybody smells it, and a great many drink it. The artist said that after using it a week the blind walk, the lame see, and the dumb speak. It revives youth, and although the analyzer does not says that it is a "fountain of life," the statistics keep by the colored attendant who hands out the fluid show that there are made as many engagements at Richfield as at any other summer fair in the country.—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's Magazine.

A King's Romance.

According to a time-honored custom the capital city of Munich invariably presents to the king, in the event of his entering the state of matrimony, a huge cask of the choicest wine grown in Bavaria and selected by a special commission. The cask is conveyed to the palace on a richly carved wagon drawn by six of the finest white stallions which can be obtained in this country. While quite a young man King Louis, as is well known, was affianced to a certain princely lady, at the time residing in Munich. Already the day of the nuptials had been fixed, and among other preparations the traditional offering of the city of Munich had been purchased, royal bridal day, "the happiest day declared old," for "state reasons."

The stables and banners were taken down, and in due time the wine and white stallions, whose companion, alas, was gone, were sold at auction. Six crown pieces—a mere trifle—was the sum realized for the last that King Louis had surprised his royal bride in a suspicious tete-a-tete with one of his subjects, the handsome son of the famous court photographer, Hanfstangel in Munich. Or, according to other, had come across some gushing love-letters, which had passed between the Princess and her humble lover previous to the king's coming. However that may be, the cruel and humiliating blow was sufficient to blight the remainder of his life, and from that moment he s

EASTERN.

The car-works of Schall & King, at Middletown, Pa., were almost wholly destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $150,000.

The Temple Theater, at Philadelphia, has been condemned by fire. Three firemen were buried under falling walls, one only being rescued in a dangerously wounded condition. The total loss is about $150,000, with insurance aggregating $240,000.

WESTERN.

Sarah M. Victor, for several years an inmate of the Ohio penitentiary on a life sentence for poisoning her brother to obtain insurance, was pardoned by Governor Foraker, because of her ill-health.

Charles Burger, a farmer, living near Eustis, Neb., returned home from town Christmas even ing and found his wife and three children dead in the house. His wife had been subject to temporary fits of insanity, and it is supposed that while out of her head she killed the three children and then cut her own throat with a razor.

The Supreme Court of Minnesota, in rendering its decision that tax titles are valid, put forth a recommendation that the obnoxious law be repealed.

SOUTHERN.

Near Newtown, Conn., William Warner shot and killed a young married woman named Mary Lynch, with whom he was intimate. He then left the premises, but returned in the morning and shot himself, his body being found lying across that of his victim. Jealousy led to the double tragedy.

Henry W. Grady, the Atlanta editor, who distinguished himself in New York by his speech at the New England banquet, is being put forward by Georgians as a Democratic candidate for Vice President with Cleveland.

POLITICAL.

Touching the question of the tariff revision and the Treasury surplus, a Washington dispatch says:

One of the high officers of the Treasury says he has no doubt that an extra session unless this Congress shall deal with the surplus question. He added that the President would say to the people's money to go on accumulating in the Treasury without any force of action putting it into general circulation. He thinks that if there is no action at the next Congress all its regulations will be repealed next year. This official expressed the opinion that the President would convene the Fifty-second Congress within thirty days after March 4, should nothing be done in the way of relief to the Treasury by that time. He pointed out the evils that would attend a regularly increasing surplus, and the necessity of the Democratic party's grasping the responsibility for continued neglect to provide against these evils, and showed that he would not call an extra session and in a plain, straightforward message admonish that Congress do its duty.

The leading candidates in the race for the United States Senatorship from Minnesota are Senator McMillan, the present incumbent, and ex-Governor Cushman K. Davis.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The President said to a Washington interviewer that he was shocked by the news of Senator Logan's death, from his own limited personal acquaintance with him he had formed a high opinion of him as a sincere, frank, and generous man, and he was would be very sensibly felt by hosts of personal friends throughout the country who had become attached to him because of his qualities of heart and by the people at large whom he had served well as a Union soldier and in the highest branch of the National Legislature.

Senator Tourman, of Ohio, being interviewed at his home in Columbus, said he had served with Logan during his first term and second term in the Senate, and had learned to appreciate him as a soldier and friend, and admire his splendid qualities in debate. The old Roman combined.

John Logan was singularly above the petty strife and jealousies of politics. He was a fair adversary and fully abreast of his party associates. He was generous, frank, and in his death this country will be hard to fill by the Republicans of Illinois. It will be a long time before to call John A. Logan. There was no hypocrisy in his composition. He carried his heart on his sleeve. He was not an office seeker, but in debate his sledgehammer blows were more effective than those of others who stood upon and hid sounding phrases were their stock in trade. He was one of the Tryte consciences was one of the great things in his life. He was a patriot, a soldier, a statesman, and voted according to his conscience, and was John Logan's style. He did nothing but in fashion if his opinion dictated otherwise.

FOREIGN.

The resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill from the British Cabinet has caused a sensation in the light into site. The desire to increase the expense of the Admiralty and War Offices, to which Lord Randolph was opposed, includes, it is believed, that the Government is of the opinion that a European war is imminent and that the Ministry of military preparations on the part of England are required to make her influence felt on the Continent.

Messrs. Dillon, Sheehy, Harris, and O'Brien appeared in court at Loughrea, Ireland, and formally justified their charges of assaul i and battery against Police Inspector Davis, who was composed of their assaults. The court decided that the charges against the four gentlemen for their conduct at Loughrea were insufficient to justify their prosecution, and they were therefore discharged. The presiding magistrate was John F. Hooper, a nationalist member of Parliament.

The British ironclad Sultan dragged her anchor in the river Tagus at Lisbon, and drifted against the French steamer Vile de Victoria, making the latter, with Forty of her passengers and crew.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Funeral services over the remains of General Logan were held in the Senate Chamber at Washington, on Friday, Jan. 31. The body was then interred in a Washington cemetery, to await a decision as to the place of final burial. One proposition made at Chicago is to cede the southern end of the lake front for the grave; another is to erect a monument at the head of Grand boulevard and change the name of that thoroughfare to Logan. The casket was made at Oneida, N. Y., of Spanish red cedar, and covered with broadcloth. While it is clear that a liberal pension will be granted to Mrs. Logan, leading men throughout the country are subscribing liberally for her relief.

A mechanic who has just returned to Oswego, N. Y., from Panama, where he was at work for the canal company, says that employes are being buried daily by hundreds. Three trains are run out of Aspinwall each day bearing bodies of dead employes, which are taken to a place called "Monkey Hill." These three trains bear three classes of corpses. The first is known as "Dumps"—those who have neither friends nor money. The second train contains those who die at work. The third contains those whose friends can pay for a decent burial. At the burying ground a long trench is dug, and the bodies are dumped in and covered with two or three feet of earth. The great objection to the food is the manner of cooking. Everything is cooked with onions. They are found in the soup and hash, and the beefsteak is smothered in them. Even the tea and coffee taste and smell of onions. The employes of the American Dredging Company all receive their pay in silver sent by the Chilian Government, and each dollar is worth about sixty-five cents.

Fred Wittrock, alias "Jim Cummings," was taken by the Pinkerton detectives from Chicago to Leavenworth, Kansas, where he made a full confession of his connection with the Adams Express robbery. A large amount of the money was recovered, it having been concealed in a box under a barn at Leavenworth. The detectives were taken to the spot and the box dug up. It was taken to that city by Cook and concealed by him and three other young men. Mrs. Haight, wife of the man who planned the robbery, was arrested at Nashville and taken to St. Louis.

The Federal Court, at Indianapolis, refused to quash the indictments for bribery found against the Republican Sheriff and Auditor-elect of Orange County, Indiana. It also declined to release Perkins, the recalcitrant Democratic witness, whose case will now be brought before John Gresham on appeal.

The steamers R. S. Hayes and City of Natchez, with four barges, were burned to the waterline at Cairo, Ill. The losses aggregate $1,000,000.

Since 1880 the iron and steel plants in Southern states have gained an annual capacity of 565,200 tons, with indications that at the next census the gain will reach 2,000,000 tons annually. The outlook for the iron industry in 1887 is more promising than in the past. Ten new blast furnaces are in progress of construction.

The river and harbor bill, as prepared by the House Committee, appropriates $22,000,000.

The General Land Office has received reports during the last week showing the removal, under peremptory orders from special agents, of fences from twenty inclosures, embracing over 225,000 acres of land, principally in the Denver Land District.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued his 15th call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds. The call is for $10,006,050 of the 3 per cent loan of 1882. The principal and accrued interest will be paid on Feb. 1, and interest will cease on that day.

DEATH OF GEN. LOGAN.

End of the Busy and Brilliant Life of the Illinois Senator.

The Gallant Soldier Passes Away Painlessly After a Fortnight's Illness.

The Last Sad Scenes—A Biographical Sketch of the Deceased Statesman.

[Washington special.]

Gen. John A. Logan, United States Senator from Illinois, died at his residence in this city on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 26, after an illness of only a fortnight.

Gen. Logan appeared in the Senate for the last time on Friday, Dec. 16. On Sunday he kept the privacy of his room, rheumatism making its first approaches. He grew rapidly worse. Dr. Parker prescribed the remedies that had begun to be effective, and before the week closed he was very perceptible that the disease had been arrested. Tuesday night he was confined to his bed, and the rheumatic tortures returned with greater severity. The following Senator was taken to his home in his bed, the last bed ever sacred of his limits. Friday night the symptoms of a complication were developed, the kidneys failing to act, and a semi-comatose condition ensued. He was treated with all which both our physicians,

Speaker Carlisle says that he does not think there will be any legislation this winter to reduce the surplus. The time is too short, and there is too great disagreement on both sides of the house. The American people cannot be made to realize any situation until it is actually upon them. There is hardly ever any legislation passed in regard to a distant future.

San Francisco reporters and detectives attended a materialization seance the other evening, and one of them grabbed the spirit of his departed mother, and another threw a dark lantern on her. She proved to be an interesting young woman clad in a neat silk gown covered with phosphorus.

Thomas Rogers, a New York printer, three months ago was left a fortune of $20,000. He at once quit work at his trade and went to work for the saloon-keepers, and so earnestly devoting himself to their interests that he soon dissipated the first installment of his fortune and reduced himself almost to insanity.

Ex-Judge Ford writes from the Louisiana penitentiary declaring that his alleged confession of the murder of Murphy was a lie, invented to help his brother escape the gallows, and that he is the innocent victim of a huge conspiracy. He appeals for charity and justice, and "points with pride" to his record on the bench.

Convict Robert, who is in prison at Fredericton, N. They raise energetic hens in Kansas. A Kingman County man had one that tried to hatch out a sitting of eggs and failed. Then tried a second lot and brought forth ten fine chicks; took care of them for six weeks, during the last three of which she laid an egg every other day; then wanted to sit again, and not being permitted, stole another hen's chicks and brought them up with more than stepmotherly devotion.

Sir John Lubbock, who has spent many years in studying the habits of ants and insects, has at present in his possession one of the strangest domestic pets ever exhibited. It is a tame wasp, which recognizes his voice, comes at his call, eats sugar from his hand, and allows him to stroke it with his finger, even on that portion of its anatomy where its sting is situated. The wasp seems to be quite happy in its captivity, and although it greatly enjoys an "outing," at Sir John's command it promptly returns to its bottle, which it seems to regard as a home.

Dr. Henry Wise, of Atlanta, has been trying for a long time to cure a scalp wound of a nine-year-old girl who, when a baby, fell in the fire and received burns that never healed. He decided to give the girl a new scalp, and said he would have to take the skin from some one's arm. The girl's cousin, a brave boy of twelve, at once bared his arm, and the doctor removed twenty-five small pieces of cuticle and placed them on the head of the girl. Both children went home well pleased, but the boy's father was very angry, and has sued the doctor for assault and battery on his son.

Does it Pay?

Three-fourths of our people are troubled with dyspepsia or liver complaint in some form or other, which by nature of the disease has a depressing influence on the mind or body, preventing them from thinking or acting clearly in any line of importance. My experience, coming out of food after eating, dyspepsia, sick headache, nothing of the stomach or any overpower of the stomach or liver upon which the whole action of our system depends are speedily and effectually overcome by the use of Green's August Flower. The most stubborn cases have yielded to its influence, as thousands of letters received will testify. The immense sale of this medicine is a other guarantee of its merits, over a million and a half bottles sold last year; we ask, will it run up to a million—two or, as the above diseases when you can have immediate relief in Big August Flower. Three doses will prove its worth. It is sold by all druggists and general dealers in all parts of the world. 20w2

Health is impossible when the blood is impure, thick and sluggish, or when it is thin and impoverished. Such conditions give rise to boils, pimples, headaches, neuralgia, constipation, and other disorders. Ayer's Sarsaparilla purifies, invigorates, and vitalizes the blood.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervous prostration. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I was just able to go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will permanently eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and can say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Bowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe my sufferings from indigestion and dyspepsia up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many so-called patent medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my troubles disappeared, and my stomach performed its functions perfectly. Today my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the liver, and assimilates organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most popular blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 283 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

OUT OF WORK.

Doing nothing and doing evil are sometimes almost synonymous. A man whose habit is work finds idling at home a very distasteful method of passing the time, and he gravitates to the social knot of acquaintances, whether they are on the street corner, in the grocery, or in the saloon. He may be a member of some trades union, and his obligations to the society prohibit him from working at his trade; but if he is a family man, he can find work that will be unprohibited and useful, without going from his own door. No allusion is made to the more laborious portions of the housewife's work, although there is opportunity here for grateful and proper assistance.

But an observant eye can find a number of little jobs to do that will make home pleasanter and increase the conveniences of housework. To illustrate from fact. A worker found himself suddenly shut off from his daily earnings, but he did not seek other involuntary idlers like himself to bewail the ill fortune. He looked at home for something to do, and found it. Several of the mortise locks on the doors refused to catch their bolts. He took them out, and found broken wire spiral springs. For those he substituted bits of rubber, and made the locks better than before. He washered the knobs of the doors that had rattling play whenever handled. He put new thresholds and door guards to outer doors which had admitted a flood to the front hall and to the kitchen whenever the rain was from east or south. He tightened rattling windows, and where the upper and lower sashes met he placed flat strips of wood covered with woolen cloth on one side and edge; this kept out a deal of cold wind. The stove top was not large enough to hold utensils in cooking in addition to others just lifted off. He went to a building in process of erection, and was given four pressed bricks. He made a frame to hold them side by side, and placed it alongside the stove. His wife considered it a great convenience. Several shelves were placed where they would do the most good. He fixed a piece, holding a number of pivoted arms, to the wall back of the stove, and the good woman had a handy drying horse for dish wipers, towels, and other small articles, and the bars, when empty, could be swung against the wall out of the way. The little girl had dolls and other playthings to be mended, there were chairs with broken backs and loose rungs which required dowel and glue, and a table with rickety legs, and one with a leaf hinge rusted through by rust. Tools and pails were in danger of coming to pieces for want of hoops. He made better hoops of wire than the original ones of paper-thin iron. As cold weather was coming, he hung a door to the pig's sleeping-place, a door double hinged with leather at the top, so as to swing both ways, and when released to hang vertical.

There was scant closet room in the house, but in the kitchen was a space unoccupied in a corner and a window where a good sized cupboard could be placed. The idle mechanic, but busy man of family, constructed a "dresser." As he called it, which, after a year's use, his wife said was the handiest piece of furniture in the house. It was 5 feet long by 3 feet wide, having a table of these dimensions, directly under which were two two drawers, running on strips furnished with rolls, for the drawers were nearly 3 feet by 2 feet 6 inches and 8 inches deep. Under these drawers were two cupboards, side by side, one furnished with shelves. The sides of the dresser extended above the table, at the back, of a width of about 8 inches, and high enough to receive 3 shelves. The contents of these shelves could be covered by curtains sliding by rings on a brass wire. Apart from labor, this piece of furniture cost less than two dollars.

This instance of useful home employment in a case of enforced idleness is cited merely as a suggestion; but many of these little jobs need not await a strike or other compulsory withdrawal from ordinary work; they are appropriate for evenings and otherwise unused holidays. There is usually some one thing or another "out of kilter" in the house, and this fact has been so far recognized that in a Western city there has been organized a jack-at-all-trades industry that makes contracts to keep houses in repair, and does all sorts of household call jobs, from mending a leaky roof to setting a pane of glass, from hanging a new door to repairing a broken lock, and it is said that the hands are never out of employment.—Scientific American.

Hungarian Hay for Horses.

In answer to an inquiry in the Country Gentleman about the injurious effects of Hungarian hay Prof. E. W. Stewart writes: The belief of the injurious effect of feeding Hungarian grass to horses has the basis of a few cases where this grass has been fed to horses after maturing its seed. The seed is too fine to be masticated or digested, and if in such cases it were fed in considerable quantity it would be likely to produce indigestion and other serious diseases in the horse. And if this grass is cut in full blossom the hay may be so dusty as to be injurious to horses with weak lungs. For hay it should be cut just before blossom, when it will be found a very nutritious, profitable hay for horses. The larger sorts of millet are of the same general character, and if the seed of golden millet is allowed to mature the seed should be thrashed and ground into meal, when horses will do well upon this millet meal fed upon cut millet straw. Hungarian grass cut early makes good sheep hay, but although the sheep can digest more of the small seed, when allowed to ripen, yet the seed not profitable to feed sheep in the straw, because they can not digest it all, and this is wasted, if nothing worse, when fed to sheep. It is much more profitable to feed any stock when cut before blossom and cured into very sweet nutritious hay. It does contain its full amount of nutriment, which it would have in seed if it grew, were it allowed to ripen. We have fed matured Hungarian to cows in milk. They eat it with avidity at first, but on examining the droppings the seed is found principally to have passed undigested, and, like ripe, second crop clover, the seed in the droppings will grow vigorously. At such fine seeds are wasted as fed when fed unground. Ground Hungarian seed is said to have an injurious effect upon pigs when fed alone, but if mixed with other feed is quite harmless. If millet seed be ground to feed to horses, it should always be mixed with moistened cut hay or Hungarian hay. But this crop has its great feeding value when cut green and cured into hay.

The Missus Board—four sisters—of Georgetown township, are among the most enterprising and successful farmers in Floyd county, Ind. They have a beautiful farm, which they personally manage. That of Israel of Jersey is one of the best in the state.

His Majesty Missala, King of the Congo, is said to have received a proposal of marriage from an English lady with a fortune of $50,000, which he declined, having a large number of native wives already.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature takes the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a host of other disturbances are The result. Many of the miseries of modern man and woman might be cured and prevent a train of serious effect if feeding Hungarian grass to horses has the basis of a few cases where this grass has been fed to horses after maturing its seed. The seed is too fine to be masticated or digested, and if in such cases it were fed in considerable quantity it would be likely to produce indigestion and other serious diseases in the horse. And if this grass is cut in full blossom the hay may be so dusty as to be injurious to horses with weak lungs. For hay it should be cut just before blossom, when it will be found a very nutritious, profitable hay for horses. The larger sorts of millet are of the same general character, and if the seed of golden millet is allowed to mature the seed should be thrashed and ground into meal, when horses will do well upon this millet meal fed upon cut millet straw. Hungarian grass cut early makes good sheep hay, but although the sheep can digest more of the small seed, when allowed to ripen, yet the seed not profitable to feed sheep in the straw, because they can not digest it all, and this is wasted, if nothing worse, when fed to sheep. The First Champagne.

Who first made champagne? In the seventeenth century a monk named Perignon had charge of the vineyard belonging to the abbey of St. Peter, Hautvillers, Champagne, and he also superintended the making of the abbey wines. In the course of his experiments he discovered "sparkling champagne. The inmates of the abbey kept the secret and the enjoyment of the delicious liquor entirely to themselves for a long time. A present was at length sent to Louis XIV., soon after which champagne became known to the outer world. A hundred years ago Moet and Chandon thought 6,000 bottles in one year an enormous production. Their successors—one only of many firms—now bottle about 200,000 dozen.

The president's new country place, outside of Washington, will not be occupied until next spring

Most Excellent.

J. J. Atkins, chief of police, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "My family and I are beneficiaries of your most excellent medicine, Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; having found it to be all that you claim for it, desire to testify to its virtue. My friends to whom I have recommended it, joined in every opportunity." Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption is guaranteed to cure coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, croup, and every affection of throat, chest and lungs. Trial bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store. Large size $1.00. 3

A STARTLING FACT.

It is not commonly known that a large proportion of the diseases incident to our malarious climate is traceable directly to the diseased condition or imperfect action of the kidneys and liver; therefore a remedy which cures the resulting disease must have found and smitten the first cause. Many persons using Athlophoros for rheumatism and neuralgia have been surprised to find that chronic disorders of the liver and kidneys have also been greatly relieved and they have written for an explanation. The fact is, that the remedy acts directly on these organs, cleansing them from all irritating substances and regulating their action. Taken in connection with Athlophoros Pills this is, without exception, the most valuable kidney and liver remedy in the world, and will cure a large proportion of those who have these diseases.

Madison, Wisconsin.

My wife was seriously afflicted with rheumatism, principally in her arm, she has now used two bottles of Athlophoros and is well and free from pain.

T. R. Terrow,
121 N. Butler Street.

About March 21st my wife was taken with a severe attack of rheumatism, upper and lower limbs and shoulders badly; suffered intense pain, and part of time was obliged to remain in bed. Tried various remedies with no relief; was induced to try Athlophoros. May 1st, after taking one dose, the pain was entirely gone and swelling all reduced. The second dose we needed like a charm, and I feel assured that another bottle would give positive cure.

Yours truly,
R. B. Watson, 151 18th Street.

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, but where they cannot be bought of the druggists, the Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send same (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 25 cts. for Pills.

For liver and kidney diseases, dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, nervous debility, diseases of women, constipation, headache, impure blood, &c., Athlophoros Pills are unrivaled.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage given by Ira Ingersoll and Ann Ingersoll, his wife, of the township of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Jacob Ruckman, of the same place, recorded in the office of the register of deeds, Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 1st day of October, 1882, in Liber 7 of mortgages, on page 1, which said mortgage was duly assigned by said Jacob Ruckman, now deceased the undersigned, his executor, by deed of assignment, which said mortgage is present due and payable, and the interest thereon, to be now due and unpaid, amounts to the sum of Twenty-Five Dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at the date hereof, to the sum of Two Hundred Dollars, secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, or any principal and interest, or any sum or sums of fifteen dollars ($15) or upwards, or any part thereof, by law or otherwise, and no action, either at law or in equity, having been instituted to recover the principal sum of said mortgage, therefore, notice is hereby given that, pursuant to a sale of the premises therein described, to wit: that certain parcel of land situate in the township of Evangeline, Charlevoix county, Michigan, described as follows, to wit: Lot 3, in the southwest quarter (3) of section twenty (20), in township number (33) north of range (8) west, containing forty acres of land, at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in Boyne City, on the First day of April, A. D. 1887, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I will foreclose said mortgage.

Dated January 4, 1887.

Eveline.

Eveline is still getting to the front.

There is about two feet of snow now, and still coming.

Mr. Dennis was badly hurt while hauling wood, last week, some of the wood falling on him.

Jack Talley is very low with consumption. He was dangerously sick last week.

While hauling logs one day last week, David Gaunt was badly crushed by a log rolling on him. He is in no danger now.

We understand that F. M. Vail, the photographer of Boyne City, was in Eveline last week visiting his father. He also sold a building in Boyne, to look up a place to erect a gallery. Everybody seems very busy yet with wood and logs. There is more furnace wood being got out than any other kind. The Fire Lake Iron Co. have their teams very busy hauling wood into their yard.

Our treasurer, Sim Brown, started Monday morning to collect taxes. Be prepared to meet his wants.

Some of our sick people are getting better fast, which we are glad to hear.

We understand that Mr. Harden Sheldon, of the northwestern part of this township, has been very sick, and is still in a critical condition.

There was a special school meeting held at District No. 3, on the 7th inst., for the purpose of changing the time of the winter term of school. There will be only two months of vacation, instead of three months, beginning the first of April. The question of a well for that school was also discussed.

We can hear the lumbermen crying "Too much snow."

Mrs. G. McDonald, who went to Canada on the 21st of December, returned last Thursday with her son Malcom, who has been staying with his aunt for the past two years, and has been receiving medical treatment, but we understand he is no better.

Railroad Prospects.

The meeting at the opera house last Thursday afternoon to consider the railroad question was well attended, and the discussions evinced much interest. W. A. Smith, first vice-president of the improvement association, called the meeting to order, and in the absence of secretary Strang C. J. Grier was made secretary pro tem. A. D. Cruickshank read the provisions of the statute for the organization of railroad corporations, and in an earnest speech advocated the immediate organization of a company to build a line connecting with the Michigan Central at Grayling, crossing the G. R. & I. at or near Mancelona. After considerable discussions by various interested persons, R. M. Cherrie, of the Pine Lake Iron Co., of Ironton, among the number, a committee of seven was appointed to solicit subscriptions to the stock for such a company. The chair appointed as such committee Messrs. Cruickshank, Eaton, and Aldrich, for Charlevoix, Mr. Cherrie for Ironton, and Messrs. Empey, Keat, and Bush, for East Jordan. Another committee, consisting of Messrs. R. W. Rane, C. J. Grier, and D. C. Nettleton, was appointed to solicit subscriptions for a preliminary survey. On Saturday this committee had raised over $100, and a party of surveyors are now out on the line.

The meeting adjourned to Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 12th.

At the railroad meeting yesterday, there were no representatives from East Jordan, and it was again adjourned to next Monday afternoon, Jan. 17th. A very favorable report was received from the party of surveyors now out.

Judging from the apparent feeling on all sides we feel confident the movement will result in a railroad for Charlevoix, that we shall be a chronicle permanent results before the close of the present year, and that the work of building will be actively begun before we write "1888." At least, those now pushing the matter declare themselves in earnest, and determined to not stop until the whistle of the locomotive is heard within our limits.

Touching the present and future prospects of Charlevoix, in regard to a railroad and accompanying increase of business of all kinds, we find a paragraph in yesterday's Sentinel worth taken as a specimen of the boom of every citizen who owns or even pretends to own property in this vicinity. It reads as follows: "The harbor were not as bright as they now are for a railroad. Nature has given the first rail vessel floated in Round lake our joy was only exceeded by that which possessed us when those desiring the proposed Fountain City came through the bridge for the first time and awakened the whole region from its slumbers, from sixty to ninety miles from south a condition of things have we passed to the limit of our then fondest hopes, and now we are upon the threshold of another era of progress, the opening of which seems nearer to us than did, in 1869, the one which has, within two decades, brought fruition to our hopes. It is good to look back over the past and number the milestones of our material advancement; but it is better to look forward in hopeful anticipation of what is to come, working together for the common good, relegating cruakers and grumblers to the rear, and by our energy and enterprise show that we deserve the blessings of the past, and deserving of the best that we can hope for in the future."

Temperance Meeting.

The first monthly temperance meeting will be held at the Congregational church, on Monday evening next, at 7.30. A program, which cannot fail to interest, has been arranged. Let the house be filled. The temperance question should interest all since it affects so many homes. Dr. Carleton, Miss Cody, and Mr. Al. Washburn will favor the audience with short addresses, recitations, or readings, Rev. Clark giving the principal address. A temperance quartette, under the leadership of W. A. Smith, will furnish the music.

Committee.

Baptist Church.

Usual services next Sunday morning, at 10.30 o'clock. Missionary praise service in the evening.

Preaching at Hilton's school house at 3 p. m. Sunday school immediately following. The school was organized last Sunday with the following officers: Superintendant, Jas. O'Brian; assistant superintendant, E. Cook; secretary, Rebecca Bolton; treasurer, Wm. Bolton.

Episcopal Visitation.

Bishop Gillispie will visit Christ church mission, Charlevoix, on Sunday next, 16th inst. Divine service, holy communion, and sermon, at 10:30 a. m. Evening service and sermon at 4 p. m., at Odd Fellows' Hall. The bishop would be glad to meet everybody, and expects to meet all interested in the mission.

Delighful Beauty's Costume.

One seen every day in the Bois de Boulogne, Paris, an old lady striving to look young; 60 vainly aping the bloom and brightness of 16. This is the Countess Vigier, the widow of a Belgian nobleman who died some years ago, and one of the noted hostesses of Nice. She used to be great dramatic prima donna, Sophie Cruvelli. She is still handsome, and with a painted face and her still fine features, set off by gray hair, she would be a charming old lady, whereas now she is only a very absurd make-believe young one. She used to delight in hats as broad as cart-wheels, and she used to wear quantities of fair yellow hair, but her son, the present Count Vigier, has interposed his veto against all such headgear. The Vicountess is famous for having invented the total suppression of underclothes, which she has grown so stout her only undergarment consists of a pair of silk tights. She has the corsage of her dress so closely and strongly boned as an ordinary corset, and underneath them there is nothing but their wearer.

On one occasion, at a grand ball at Vichy, including her dress being too tightly drawn, yielded slightly,

EASTERN.

Judge Peckham, of the New York Supreme Court, has decided that the repeal of the Broadway charter was constitutional, and that the mortgages are a lien on the property.

The Laird House and nine other buildings at Greensburg, Pa., were burned. The losses aggregate $100,000.

James A. McMaster, the editor of the Freeman's Journal, New York is dead.

The socialistic leaders in New York cannot conceal their disgust over drafts for $1,900 drawn by Dr. Ewling and wife for thirteen weeks' services to the cause.

Gen. W. W. Loring Pasha, who commanded a corps in the Egyptian army, died of pneumonia in New York, aged 69.

An Italian girl, named Lutorre, fell across the track of the Third Avenue Elevated Road in New York, in front of an approaching train, and was instantly killed. The engine had to be raised with jackscrews to release her corpse. Meanwhile the road was blocked with trains for two miles.

Reports from the New England fisheries show that the past year was a very disastrous one. Twenty-six vessels were lost, valued at $132,000, and 127 persons were drowned.

It is stated that the oleomargarine law has already saved over $1,000,000 to the dairy interests of New York State alone.

At the opening of the opera season in Boston last week, head-dresses among the ladies proved to be the exception. The reform is due to the press.

WESTERN.

Robert A. Pinkerton placed Fred Wittrock in jail at St. Louis, and Detective Robertson lodged Weaver, the Chicago accomplice, in an adjoining cell. Wittrock confessed to the reporters that himself and Haight planned the robbery, and he insisted that Fitzherrington had no knowledge of the scheme until he was disarmed in his car. Nearly $50,000 has been recovered, most of it under Oscar Cook's house in Leavenworth.

On an order by Judge Gresham, Mr. Perkins, the commissioner witness in the Indianapolis election fraud cases, has been released on bail.

Omaha erected 1,600 new buildings last year, at a cost of $5,024,000.

During the year just closed, the Chicago Postoffice received $2,000,847 for stamps and postal cards.

The growth of Milwaukee during the year shows gratifying progress, while that of Kansas City has been phenomenal. The business of St. Louis, on the other hand, shows a considerable decrease, and the city can no longer lay claim to being a pushing center.

The buildings erected last year in Chicago would make a straight line for ten miles, and their cost was $22,000,000. One-fourth as much more was expended just outside the city limits on three sides, and a portion of the lake would have given place to stately structures but for an injunction by the courts. The rail stock transfers for the year aggregated $75,000,000.

A Sioux City (Iowa) special says: In the District Court here John Arnes, Jr., Fred Muncharch, Jr., Paul H. Leader, Harry Sherman, and Albert Kuschinski pleaded not guilty to the charge of murder in the Hadduck case, and were given further time to plead on the charge of conspiracy. Sylvester Grands pleaded not guilty to the charge of conspiracy and murder. Grands filed an affidavit of inability to procure counsel, and Judge Isaac Pendleton was appointed to defend him. Judge Pendleton is law partner of M. M. Gray, one of the attorneys for the defense, so that probably Grands will be used for the defense so far as possible. Arrangements have been made on the civil if due up to Jan. 22, so that the trial of the Hadduck cases can not come on before that time, and no assignment has yet been made for them, but it is expected to get at them during the term."

The failure is announced of Upton & Co., dealers in agricultural implements at Cedar Rapids, with liabilities of $75,000.

A girl at Piper City, Ill., sent 3 cents to a Chicago mail-order house just before Christmas, for an elaborate wax doll. Her letter was so amusing that it was handed to a postoffice inspector. The clerks in the office made up a purse of $5, and forwarded a doll which must have exceeded her anticipations.

SOUTHERN.

Hirsch Brothers' store, twelve miles below Vicksburg, Miss., was burglarized, and Milton Brown, colored, was shot and killed. Brown's brother, Bradley and Raymond Murphy, known to be enemies of the murdered man, were arrested for the crime. A mob forcibly took them from the officers of justice and hanged them on a telegraph pole.

A steamboat used as a boarding-house at Jackson, Ala., was burned at midnight. Twenty-five persons lost their lives, ten perishing in the flames, and the others being drowned.

The new Sunday law at New Orleans is said to have been observed last Sabbath at all but about four hundred places of business, although the District Court had enjoined the Mayor and police from interfering with certain specified bar-rooms and groceries. The gambling houses gave away no liquors. The open shops were generally in the French quarter.

The Dolores Land and Cattle Company of Texas, chartered during the last year with a capital stock of $2,000,000, has made an assignment. The liabilities are $500,000, assets $450,000.

A San Antonio dispatch furnishes meagre particulars of a horrible collision on the Southern Pacific Railroad, 200 miles west of that point. Nine Mexicans were burned to death among the wreckage. The men were riding on an open flat-car when the collision occurred. This car was driven under a heavily laden box-car, on the top of which several others had piled, when the entire wreck took fire, literally roasting alive the Mexicans, who were pinned down on the top of the flat-car. None of the bodies were recoverable when recovered.

WASHINGTON.

It is now thought probable that Mrs. Logan will consent to the burial of the deceased General on the site in the Lake Park which has been tendered, free of all restriction, by the Chicago Council. The Washington subscription for the benefit of Mrs. Logan amounted Saturday to about $40,000, and the same day Mrs. Logan received $6,500 as the result of the first day's subscription in Chicago.

The decrease in the public debt during December was $6,565,252. The interest-bearing debts now amount to $1,133,646,462. The portion of this amount of gold has been steadily growing since July last, and is now $120,912,413. The government holdings of silver have rapidly fallen off for some months, the aggregate being $75,998,934. Following is the official debt statement for December:

POLITICAL.

The New York Sun reports that a Republican conference was held last week at Philadelphia to make arrangements to keep Senator Don Cameron for Presidential nomination.

The contest for Gen. Logan's seat in the Senate is exciting no small degree of interest on Illinois, particularly in the Republican caucus. There is quite a list of Richmonds in the field. Ex-Congressman Charles B. Farwell, of Chicago, has a strong following. Clark E. Carr, Gen. Henderson, Congressman Cannon, and Congressman Payson have each their quota of supporters, while the name of Robert T. Lincoln has been strongly urged by not a few. Ex-Gov. John M. Hamilton would not refuse the plum if it fell to him, and there are any number of dark horses browsing around preyne for the lightning to strike them. Gov. Oglesby positively announces an unmandatory. Senator Cullom's preferences are not yet known, but it is the opinion of the Illinoisans who visited Washington that so far as possible, he desires to keep out of the fight and that his fortunes with no one candidate.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

Two thousand brewery employes in Philadelphia struck against a reduction of 20 per cent in their wages.

It is computed that there were 3,000 strikes in 1886, and that the loss to the country was about $75,000,000.

The Brewers' Union of New York has suspended District Assembly No. 89, of the Knights of Labor.

The carpenters of Chicago are organizing so as to be in shape to demand eight hours' work and $3 a day in the spring.

RAILROAD INTELLIGENCE.

The Atlantic and Danville Road, fifty-five miles in length, has been purchased by Senator Flower, and will be extended to Danville, Va.

The Vanderbilts have declared dividends of 5 per cent each on the Michigan Central and Lake Shore Roads, and 1½ per cent. on Canada Southern. Shareholders Burton, elected President of the Bee Line Road, and a surplus of $105,000 over all charges was reported, but no dividend was declared.

The Pennsylvania Company has arranged to lease all its branches of its freight cars with oil stores.

Receiver Cooley has appointed William Duncan General Traffic Manager of the Wabash lines under his control; R. H. Wade, General Superintendent, and G. W. Stevens Assistant; S. W. Snow, General Passenger Agent; F. I. Whitney, Auditor; and W. R. Cornman, Treasurer. The general offices will be located in Chicago.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The residence of the Chilian minister at Washington was robbed of $2,000 worth of jewelry and considerable money by a discharged servant named Silva, who was arrested while boarding a train for New York.

The Executive Departments in Washington were closed on the occasion of General Logan's funeral. General Sheridan was Marshal of the funeral procession, which was an imposing one. A special train from Chicago, 2,500 ladies and gentlemen met to do honor to the memory of the soldier, statesman, Preachers, soldiers, and politicians paid tribute to the dead hero. The Chicago Council has set apart a space, about 325 feet square, at the south end of the lake front, in that city, as a resting place for General and Mrs. Logan.

Thomas Stevens, the bicyclist who has for the last three years been on a tour around the globe, has reached the end of his journey, and will be in San Francisco within a few days, where he will be banqueted by the local bicycle clubs.

Extremely cold weather prevailed throughout the country from the 1st to the 4th of the new year. The Dakota wave even swept south as far as the City of Mexico, where the thermometer stood at 18 degrees below zero. In the Indian Territory and in Southern Michigan it was strong enough to bear horses. It is reported as the earliest freezing of the lakes in years. So firm is the ice in the St. Lawrence that teams are crossing between Kingston and Cape Vincent, a distance of twelve miles.

A Washington dispatch says Mrs. Logan expressed to an intimate friend of her late husband her opposition to the burial of the remains in the square set apart on the lake front, Chicago, and her willingness to accept a location along the South Parks or boulevards. It is understood decided that there is dissatisfaction on the part of Gen. Logan's family with the medical board in charge of his last illness. The fund for the relief of Mrs. Logan had reached upward of $50,000 on the 5th inst.

FOREIGN.

The Chancellorship of the British Exchequer has been accepted by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill.

Just outside the harbor of St. John, N. B., the steamer Sir Leonard was turned to the water's edge. One man was drowned while attempting to swim ashore, and five others were fearly burned. The financial loss is about $70,000.

Theodore von Oppelsoir, the Austrian astronomer, is dead.

There is a growing belief in Vienna that Russia is determined on war. Reports of increased Russian armaments are continually coming to hand from various sources. The most intelligent of these kind is to the effect that 300,000 Russian troops have been ordered to mass on Austrian frontier. Reports of 10,000 houses have received official notice that soldiers will soon be billeted in them.

Mr. Gladstone celebrated his 77th birthday by the best of his friends and by the announcement of the death of the Hon. John A. Logan, the State Inspector of Mines from the State of Illinois. "As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased," said Mr. Thomas, I move that the House do adjourn, and I do not make the motion in the spirit of a mark that the House be suspended in order that his colleagues may go home to pay last testimony to his worth. The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned.

Mayor Ames, of Minneapolis, went before Judge Cory and took the oath of office as Governor of Minnesota. He announces that he will fight to the finish. He charges that McGill was elected by fraud.

The Supreme Court of Indiana affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court in the matter of the Lieutenant Governorship, on the ground that there is no jurisdiction to entertain the suit for an impeachment.

The Nebraska Legislature organized with N. V. Harlan as Speaker of the House, and George D. McKeighan President of the Senate. As Harlan is a friend of Senator Van Wyck, the latter thinks his prospects for reelection look bright.

The New York Assembly elected James W. Husted to succeed Thomas Lemuel Jr. as House chosen Henry N. Boyer, and the Hill man Hiram W. F. Calhoun.

A fast train on the Baltimore & Ohio road, fifty minutes behind schedule time, collided with a freight train on a curve near Republic, Ohio. The telescoped coaches at once took fire. No one escaped from the smoking-car. Fifteen bodies were recovered from the wreck, and several wounded persons were taken to Republic. Mrs. Fish, of Joliet, a sister of the late Senator Logan, escaped injury. Five of the killed were train employes. While a fast express from Chicago, on the Boston & Albany Road, was crossing a freight train near West Springfield, Mass., one of the wheels of the express broke, throwing the train against the freight, and causing a terrible wreck. Two men was burned to death, another was fatally wounded, and several were injured. A couple of ice-harvesters was struck by a train near Pewaukee, Wis. Three of them were killed and one injured.

BOTH houses of Congress assembled after the holiday recess, on the 4th inst., but immediately adjourned in memory of Sardar Sardar Logan. In the Senate, as soon as the reading of the journal was ended, Mr. Cullom took the floor and said: "Mr. President, the angel of death stalks through the land, and no organization has been much unexpected during the brief recess of the Senate, imposing on us a duty, which I have seldom felt so keenly as the duty of announcing the death of my distinguished colleague, Mr. Logan. I shall not at this time, Mr. President, attempt to pronounce the words which are due to the memory of one who for so many years was so important and conspicuous a part in the affairs of this nation. I shall, at a later day, if I shall deem it appropriate upon occasions and shall speak, as I may be best able, the sentiments of the Senate, and of my associates when an opportunity will be given to the Senate to express its sentiments in his memory. As a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased Senator Logan, I move that the Senate do now adjourn." The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned. In the House of Representatives Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted: "The death of Hon. John A. Logan has filled the House with the announcement of the death of the Hon. John A. Logan, late Senator from the State from the State of Illinois. "As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased statesman," said Mr. Thomas, I move that the House do adjourn, and I do not make the motion in the spirit of a mark that the House be suspended in order that his colleagues may go home to pay last testimony to his worth. The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned.

VETERANS' HOME.

Dedication of the New Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids.

Imposing Dedicatory Ceremonies and Eloquent Addresses.

Description of the Magnificent Structure—Inception of the Project.

The exercises at the dedication of the new Michigan Soldiers' Home, at Grand Rapids, were held on the 30th ultimo, and were of a very interesting character.

From the Grand Rapids Telegraph-Herald we condense a report of the proceedings.

At 11:30 the Governor's party and other illustrious visitors took carriages and went out to the Home, while hundreds of people made use of private conveyances, placed by Messrs. W. H. Hoyt, H. H. Hinsdill, trains as a means of transportation. 2,000 alone going on the trains. The Governor's party were escorted to the new soldiers' Home by a large cavalcade, which on reaching the Home was formally received by the prominent ladies and gentlemen present. In a few minutes the party made a complete tour of inspection of the Home and then wedged its way through a mass of compressed humanity to the little stand which had been built for the occasion in the main vestibule. Back of this rostrum was arranged Wurzburg's orchestra, and, without, a band discoursed martial airs.

The main vestibule, the corridors running from it, the reading room and library, and other adjacent apartments, the corridors which divide upon the second and story vestibule, were literally jammed full of human beings. It is estimated that there were in the building during the dedicatory exercises 7,000 individuals. The platform afforded seats for the Governor's party and the following prominent men: Governor-elect Luce, ex-Governor Bliss, Rev. Washington Gardner, Hon. John Northwood, Supt. Commander G. A. R. for Michigan; Representative Catchoon, ex-Senator Fogg, Hunger Wells, General Smith and General Pierce.

The programme was opened at five minutes past 1 o'clock, and terminated quarter as prepared. "America" was sung by the assembled throng, and by the venerable leading, Rev. Washington Gardner was announced by the presiding officer, Gen. Alger, and offered prayer, after which Charles Hoyt, Esq., in his capacity as chairman of the building to F. W. Hollister, the architect, who, in turn, handed it over to Gov. Alger; and Gov. Alger, acting for the State, tendered the keys of the building to Gen. Pierce for dedication, as Department Commander, and by State Inspector General as officer of the day. Chief Musician Gilbert played an air, Chief Engineer Cutler, Quartermaster Sergeant Chas. Hanson, Sergeant Major Geo. Honor, and by Comrade Lawrence acting as chaplain, the building was dedicated for the day, dedicated the Home for the life of the veteran soldiers of the State. Musical selections were scattered through this and the subsequent portion of the programme.

Governor Luce, the old "War Governor," Austin Blair, spoke as follows:

I am very glad indeed to meet you to-day. I had believed I would be able to make a little speech, to meet one for more eloquent than I, but to-day I find myself unable to do so. I was asked to be the recipient of gold in Mechanics' Hall, for I feel as if I had something to say with the sugar until a stiff cream is formed firm enough to mold in the hand and then put into the form desired. This is the foundation for all French candy.

Variety can be given to the collection by one guest dissolving a small teaspoonful of gum sugar first in the egg and flavoring with strong coffee, or with Amory grant flavoring, or with lemon or orange juice, or gratitude to you for your hospitalities, and yet the confectioner's sugar (made sugar will not have well stood, favoring it with coffee. The plain creams may be "covered with as numerous and as beautiful designs as fancy is always sifted. Mold the cream into any shape you may fancy or may have seen, eggs shapes, balls, squares, or lozenge shapes.

Have nuts benched and dried, almonds, filberts, walnuts, pecans, and combine them with the creams as you fancy.

Cherries and a few other candied fruits give a variety of color to the whole.

Chocolate drops are a favorite kind of candy. They are best made of these creams, flavored with vanilla and molded into cone shapes. Melt baker's chocolate in a bowl and stir over boiling water. Drop the creams into it and roll until covered thoroughly, then set on buttered paper to dry. Keep the chocolate hot until all the creams are used.

Nougat, the most toothsome dainty of the confectioner's art, may be made by adding a teaspoonful of honey to the egg, with several nuts of any or all kinds, sliced and mixed with the confectionery sugar. The nougat should be molded into the cake, pressed down to the thickness of an inch, and then to be nicely sliced with a thin, hot knife.

The variety and pleasure in making these French candies are only limited by your own fancies.

What a Woman Also Should Do.

A girl or woman who meets with this accident of setting her clothes on fire should immediately lie down on the floor, and so roll upon the floor or ground, or smother instantly, if she still be erect, make her lie down and roll herself in a rug, or in a horizontal position, and keep her in it. Ignorance of the fatal consequences of the fallacy from below bounds with fearful rapidity, and the result will be, as experts, the fatality of disfigurement in hands, face and neck, or even to the burns inflicted about the body, neck, face, and hands, and not to injuries of the lower limbs. Now, the reason that the person, or some clothes are on fire is in a horizontal position, the flame from the floor will ascend, but only the air and not the flame will reach the face. Time is thus gained for further action, and it such a thing is in fact applied a few seconds are precious, may prevent. Once in the open air, if the person should attempt to crawl to a hole, pull or to a door, so as to be out of the open air, the flame will leap. The drought from an open door and hallway would serve to blow the flame if any, away from the body; or again, still better, the person should be laid on a horizontal position, and then the flame would be blown from the burning flames.—Dr. John Marshall, F. R. S.

WHEN Fr. Lilli Lehmann decided last spring to remain in Berlin, she was warm in the vexation allowed her by the authorities of the Berlin opera house, she forfeited her right to a pension upon retiring from the stage. An appointment to any one of the great German opera houses is for life, or until incapacitated by age. After serving for a certain number of years, a singer receives a pension, the amount of which is proportionate to the amount of the salary paid. As compared to the salaries at our Metropolitan Opera House, Berlin pays about half as much as we do. At present the prima donna at Berlin, Frau Sachse-Hofmeister, receives $8,000 a year, for which she is expected to sing sixty-five times.

A NEW HAMPSHIRE woman, aged 80 years, when asked recently how she had kept herself so vigorous and healthy, replied, "By never allowing myself to fret over things I cannot help, by taking a trip and sometimes two every day of my life, by never taking my washing, ironing and baking to bed with me, and by oiling all the pleiot faith that there is a brain and a heart to this great universe, and that I could trust them both."

The Charges Against Him.

It is not necessary to mention names, but there is a certain member of Congress who is not the promptest pay in the world, and, to make it worse, he is as pompous as he is procrastinating. Once, when he was having a sharp fight for the nomination, the party paper, which was unfavorable to him, published charges against him of such a nature that he felt compelled to call on the editor. He went to the office, and the first man he met was the man he was looking for. "Here, sir," he said, without preliminaries, "I want an explanation, sir." "What about, Colonel?" asked the editor, smiling at the very pleasantest manner. "You have made charges against me, sir," stormed the Colonel, waving up the spinners on the floor. "Certainly we have," responded the editor, more blandly than ever. "Well, sir, why did you do it, sir?" Why did you do it? I demand an explanation, sir! I repeat, why was it done, sir?" "Because you didn't pay cash, Colonel," said the editor, laying a bill on the counter. "We have you charged with three election announcements at $5 each, and six years' subscription at $2 per annum, in advance—$27 in all, Colonel." The shock was so great that the Colonel forgot all about the other charges and hurried out of the office.—Washington Critic.

A Fall Circus.

"Say, pa," said little Johnny Redtop, at the tea-table, "I think you're a mean."

"Johnny, my boy," said Mr. Redtop, mildly, "you shouldn't talk to your father in that manner."

"Well, what's what I think, anyhow," persisted Johnny.

"Well, why so?" inquired the stern parent.

"Because you didn't take me to the circus with you last week when you was away."

"Johnny Scott, boy! there wasn't any circus," returned Mr. Redtop, looking apprehensively at Johnny.

"What made you think there was circus, Johnny?" inquired Mrs. Redtop, her sweet tones falling to hide the dismay of her smile.

"Because" responded Johnny, "I heard Mr. Jones say to Mr. Smithers that he and pa had been out seeing the elephant, and it was a holy circus. There, now, ain't it so?"—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

A Steam Plow.

An English journal mentions a novelty in plows used in Spain. It consists of a plow to a depth of thirty inches, and turns a furrow fifty feet wide. It is drawn by two sixteen-horse power engines. It is a one-share plow, but fitted with two wings, the first turning a furrow sixteen inches wide and fourteen inches deep, the second following to a depth of thirty inches and turning over a furrow twenty four inches wide, leaving land thus completely loosened to a depth of thirty inches. Drawn by the steam engines, the account says, it is possible with this plow to plow fifty acres per day. In cases where it is not necessary to turn up the land to this great depth, but simply to stir up the under-soil, all that is required is to take of the last plow share and in place fit a subsoil share which may reach to a depth of twenty-four or thirty inches.

Mr. O'Malue—Ye ra not, me darlint, but I bought ye the new lamp yez has been bothering me for. Now, where shall I fix it, aye?

Mrs. O'Malue—You're a good soul, Patrick. The lamp must be long high, as high as ye can.

"Sure it will be no use this."

"It's the style, Patrick, dye make no mistake about that."

"The style is it? Ye are sure?"

"Indade I am. Didn't I see only yesterday in a fashion paper that a haugin' lamp should be so high that ye can walk under it wid an umbrella."

Which Is Married to the Other?

A Chicago writer discusses the question whether married weddings the man is married to the woman or the woman married to the man. Should the marriage notice read: "Mary Ann, daughter of Jehial Meadback, to Abashamera Starkcin," or "Abashamera Starkcin, to Mary Ann, daughter of Jehial?" That is the question which agitates Chicago.

The weight of testimony is all in favor of wedding the woman to the man. The Bible is on that side of the question, and so is the marriage service of the Episcopal Church. Usually the husband objects to being married to the woman, unless she has money. He prefers the other form and most of the ladies agree to it.—Utica Herald.

The Champion Tariff Swindle of the World.

To My Fellow Citizens:

There are many Christmas books, pamphlets and leaflets published that are in general more amusing than useful. Allow me, my fellow citizens to present you with a brief collection of statistics that will, I am sorry to say, be more useful than amusing. I forbeareth give an extract of only a small number of articles that may be called luxuries and others that certainly are necessities of life which I place in parallel columns to show how they are respectively taxed by the present tariff, and without further preface here they are:

PAYS ON ARTICLES OF LUXURY:	PAYS ON ARTICLES OF NECESSITY:
Guitar strings, free.	Castor oil, 100 per cent.
Bedal or orange flower water, free.	Linseed oil, 67 per cent.
Diamonds, 10 per cent.	Common window glass, 80 per cent.
Raw silk, free.	Raw wool, 67 per cent.
Jewelry, 25 per cent.	Steel rails, 55 per cent.
Fish Steels, 25 per cent.	Horseshoe nails, 100 per cent.
Choice still wines, in bottles, 50 per cent.	Woolen, mixed woolen goods, costing above 24 cents per yard, 71 per cent.
Finest thread lace, 50 per cent.	Sewing thread, 51 per cent.
Carpets, Axminster and Axminster carpets, costing above 62½ a yard, 40 per cent.	Common druggets, costing above 40 cents a yard, 50 per cent.
Common woolen shawl, costing above 40 cts. a pound, 50 per cent.	Common woolen cloth, costing above 24 cts. a pound, 50 per cent.
Musical instruments of all kinds 25 per cent.	Galvanized wire smaller than No. 20 wire gauge, 152 per cent. Smaller than No. 20, 135 per cent.
Dogs on a quart bottle of champagne, costing above 40 a bottle, free.	Dogs on a pint bottle worth of blacking or cotton fabric, costing above 24, 135 per cent.
Berry and curry powder, free.	Pepper, costing 8 cents per pound, 100 per cent.
Olives, green or preserved, free.	Corn starch, 80¼ per cent duty.
Gloves of all kinds free.	Sal soda, 25 per cent duty.
Of course this is only a drop in the bucket of thousands of other items that might be treated in a similar manner. And now I challenge the journals who uphold our tariff system—1. To print the above list, which represents the greatest legal swindle of the age. And 2. To explain and vindicate the justice of retaining these enormous taxes. I wish further to remind your fellow citizens, that when the question came up in the house, last Saturday, to consider, remember, I say, "consider," the advisability of reducing these taxes, 154 members of Congress (composed of 131 republicans and 23 democrats) maintained by their vote that the question should not even be considered. Remember, further, that for the $200,000,000 customs revenue that goes into the treasury, you, my fellow citizens, pay at least $1,000,000,000 into the pockets of monopolists every year. I regret that I shall spoil your Christmas dinner. But if reason, common sense, fair play and independence, which right to be the distinguishing marks of the American citizen, is not entirely subdued, this very little Christmas present may prove more useful to the future welfare of this free land than any thing that you could possibly have received during the year. There is a time in this country when such uncontradicted wrongs and legal robbery was properly and lawfully resisted. How much of this spirit of freedom and independence is left in the present generation to lift up not their hands but their voices, in defense of their rights, it is for you to decide. Respectfully, your fellow citizen, J. S. MOORE

The Michigan Tradesman.

A Delinquent Who Wants "Damages to Reputation."

MUIR, Dec. 21, 1886.

A. Stowe, Grand Rapids:

DEAR SIR—Oliver Ely, Sr., a member of the Business Men's Association, sent to a number of poor paying customers on his books a regular notice for collection of accounts, of them has sworn out summons for damages, on account of the notices. He is a chronic kicker.

What can he do, or what steps are necessary for us to take? He has a warrant out for both members of the firm to whom the debt is a first case, and the second was the private property of only one member, he having bought out the interests of the firm. What legal standing has the Association anyway? Your reply will oblige Yours truly, L. A. DAY.

See's protection R. M. A.

Replying to the above, the Tradesman would state that the Business Men's Associations so far organized in this state possess no legal status, as they are not incorporated. At the present time the advantages of being incorporated bodies are not sufficient to compensate for the expense involved, but definite action in the premises will probably be taken by the state association in the next meeting in March.

The insurance of legal summons at the instance of a delinquent need give Mr. Ely no uneasiness, if the account against the "chronic" is an honest one, as the validity of the system of notification sheets has been sustained by courts of last resort in several different states. Probably the most recent decision of the kind was by Judge Peckham, of North Carolina, in the case of Green vs. U. S. Dealers' Protective Association. The plaintiff made a motion for an injunction to restrain the threatened publication of his name in a delinquent list. Judge Peckham refused to grant the the injunction, holding that: "An association of dealers to protect themselves from giving credit to delinquent debtors cannot be restrained by injunction from publishing to its members the plaintiff's name as such delinquent, if he be in fact so indebted and such publication will be the truth." The plaintiff appealed from this decision and carried it to the highest tribunal in the state, which affirmed the decision. Another authority, in quoting the decision, said: "It follows that if the ultimate publication of the debtor's name would be a legal and justifiable act, the sending of letters threatening to do that legal act would not render the association or the sender liable."

What further proof does Mr. Ely or any other friend of organization want of the strict legality of the blank system in use by the local associations of Michigan? If any delinquent takes it into his head that it is damaging to his reputation to be compelled to pay his debts or be put on the delinquent list, it is the plain duty of the person taking the initiative to defend his action to the utmost and make it so uncomfortable for the dead beat that he would wish he had never been born.

N. W. Ayer & Son's American Newspaper Annual for 1886 contains a carefully prepared list of all newspapers and periodicals in the United States and Canada, arranged by states in geographical sections, and by towns in alphabetical order, giving the name of the papers, the issue, general characteristic, year of establishment, size, circulation, and advertising rates for ten lines one month. A list of all Newspapers inserting advertisements, arranged in states by counties, with the distinctive features and circulation of each paper. A complete lists of all the religious or agricultural periodicals, of medical, commercial, scientific, educational, or any other of the class publications, as well as all publications printed in a foreign languages. One of its chief features is a carefully prepared description of every county in the United States, setting forth its location, area, adjacent navigable streams, the character of its surface, the nature of its soil, its leading crops and manufactures, its county seat and population. A similar, but more elaborate descriptive heading, is appended to each state, territory and canadian province.

What True Merit Will Do

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual proprietary medicines, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of cough medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For all obstinate cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. What True Merit Will Do

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds, and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual proprietary medicines, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of cough medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For all obstinate cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Ferry Wood and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Dr. Pete's Magic Pain Oil is

Good for both internal and external use.

Good for sprains, black and blue bruises, and swollen joints.

Good for wounds made by knives, scissors, and implements of destruction.

Good for mosquito bites, and rheumatism's terrible torture. Sold by Ferry Wood and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

No sufferer from any scrofulous disease, who will fairly try Lyon's Sarsaparilla, need despair of a cure. This remedy purges the blood of all impurities, destroys the germs of scrofula, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the physical organization.

Stop that Cough.

Stop that cough, by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral—the best remedy for all throat and lung diseases. It will allay inflammation, and restoration, and strengthen the vocal organs. Ayer's Almanacs are free to all. Ask for one.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became severe. Daily settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and always with

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse and settled on my lungs. I had a hard cough, and was very weak. Those who knew my best considered my life to be in good danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe this preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Albany, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

R. M. Cherrie expresses the belief that during the next eighteen months this country will see another great boom in railroad building, after which there will be another relapse. If Charlevoix is to have a road at all, she must get it this year.

When Mr. Myers was hurt at Stover's mill Tuesday morning, he was at once put into Mr. Stover's light two-horse sleigh which had just returned from taking the children to school, and the ponies were run all the way to town, to get him home as quickly as possible.

At the annual meeting of the Charlevoix Mfg. Co., the old board of directors were re elected, as follows: F. J. Mesick, A. Buttars, M. J. Stockman, H. Lee Eldridge and S. M. See. The election of officers will occur later, as Mr. Buttars and Mr. Stockman are out of town.

The following firms joined the Business Men's Association at the last meeting: F. G. Hines & Co., Perry Weed, Charlevoix Savings Bank, A. E. Mason, J. L. Hurd, and Washburn & Ackert. The next meeting will be held on the first Tuesday evening in February.

We have it from reliable authority that the Michigan Central railroad company will extend their road from Grayling, in Crawford county, to Charlevoix via. Mancelona and Bellaire. By consulting the map it will be noticed that this is a very feasible route indeed.—Bellaire Bronco.

The question of dividing the township of Evangeline came up before the board of supervisors this meeting and was defeated. No special sectional strife was exhibited although Supervisor Heligel dwelt strongly upon the advantages to be derived by such a division.—Citizen.

The Jordan River House is now undergoing renovation and will shortly be opened to the public by Messrs Marshall & Beardsley, of Elk Rapids, who intend to rush the business, and run a first class hotel a $1.50 per day. We have no doubt but they will consider a share of the patronage.—Enterprise.

A. F. Myers was struck on the head by a flying edging at Stover's mill Tuesday morning, and considerably bruised. He was taken home and the wound dressed, but has suffered intensely ever since, not being able to get sleep or rest on account of the pain. The right eye is a total loss.

It seems that arrangements have at last been made to build the big summer hotel on Mackinaw Island, which has been talked of for several years. It is to cost $100,000, and the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad company will move the Strond & Dilworth business recently in operation at Horton's Bay, to his former near Susan Island.

Rev. Mr. Thurston will preach at Hines's school house, next Sunday morning, at 10 o'clock, p. m. At night preaching and revival service at Dickson's school house, at 7 o'clock.

Speaking of the possible extension of the C. & W. M. R. R. to Charlevoix, the Grand Rapids Telegram-Herald says: "The benefits of such an extension are obvious. A new country will be opened up and developed, another avenue for shipment of pine and hardwood timber and a new outlet for the pig iron manufactured at Ironton, five miles from Charlevoix, will be made."

PARTED.

BY M. A. R.

You ask if I remember you
That parting hour, so many years ago,
As if, my friend, I ever could forget
A farewell spoken that had pushed me so.

You cherish in your memory
My memory, warm and true, you say;
Your vision love was given even then to me,
And yet, you cast your happiness away.

You chose a future one to be your wife,
One who has proved false, and your soul has true
Then she you walked beside that happy eve,
Who gave, unsought, a heart's first love to you.

You come to me for comfortour at last;
The happiness you sought you, so she have found;
I bid you not despair, for it will be
A little brighter, happier, just beyond.

For just beyond us waits our Father's home,
A mansion glorified by One most like
Who calls his suffering children home to Him,
And we'll await his summons, you and I.

The folly of those youthful days forgot;
We'll hasten on our pilgrim way, we can not err
Who have a sacred duty to perform you know;
We find no happiness unmixed with care.

We met and parted, and we now must walk
In different paths through life;
I were folly to regret the olden days,
Or to repine at the fate that has set aside
Our fair divinity, and if friendship true
Will any comfort be, I give to you.
The truest, purest friendship one ever knows,
Which from the ashes of a dear, dead love has grown.

OUR FIRST BATTLE.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

To my veteran of two or three years faithful service in the field this will be a most attractive title. After being some what hardened to war by the smoke, the toil, and the blood of several active campaigns, it is interesting to go back to the first occasion when he found himself under fire, and twice its scenes and incidents.

Let the reader turn to the map of Louisiana, and examine the southeast part, west of the Mississippi. From Morgan City (known during the war as Brashear), up to New Iberia, he will see a narrow neck of land between the Gulf of Mexico and Grand Lake, which is traversed by Bayou Teche on its way to Berwick Bay. This neck, as I call it, is even narrower than it looks to be on the map, for impenetrable swamp-forests bound it on the Gulf side, so that, from bayou to swamp, there is often a width of less than two miles of territory. At the narrowest point, which may be marked on the map as about half-way between Brashear and Franklin, the Confederate General Richard Taylor had, in the early spring of 1863, constructed large earthworks right across the neck, mounted them with artillery, some of which was quite heavy, and remained there as the season advanced, waiting for General Banks to come up and fight.

The battle that occurred here on the 12th and 13th of April was the first experience of the kind to probably three-fourths of the Union side who were engaged in it. Seventeen of our regiments were under fire here; how many Taylor had is unknown; but he certainly had enough to serve about twenty-five pieces of artillery, which make things quite lively for us in those two days. The fight, known as the battle of Bisland, from the plantation on which it occurred, occupies no conspicuous place in the history of the war; indeed, it is probable that thousands of the readers of that history never heard of it; but it was the real thing to us, in the way of war, and was attended by incidents of a highly interesting character. I propose to describe the field as I saw it in an off-hand way, and will make it much more interesting than the historian could.

We moved out from our camps on the westerly side of Berwick Bay on the morning of the 12th. It was Sunday; but that circumstance has never made any cause in war, and it did not in ours. I feel like confessing, in all humility, that the volunteers often had great difficulty in keeping the calendar straight when out on campaign, and that Sundays were too apt to be treated like other days. But in Louisiana there was one test of the day that never failed. When the negro women exhibited themselves in the gaudiest attire, decked in all the colors of the rainbow, then the Sabbath had come—and!

Scouts and spies and friendly negroes had given information as to where the bayou works were, and one day's steady march would have brought us up to them. But my country was by no means open, though flat; it was dotted with groves, sugar-brick sugar-houses, growing cane and other obstacles which might conceal hostile skirmishers; so our advance was cautious. It was made generally in two columns, one in the road along the bayou, and one through the fields. Two gunboats kept along with us, steaming up the Teche, and a small force of cavalry was a quarter of a mile up to the front.

Let me pause only long enough to speak of this wonderful country we were passing through. The soil was a rich black alluvium, deposited in past ages by the Mississippi and its outbreaking bayous. Nature fairly revels in that soil and that climate. Vast plantations of giant sugarcane are here; oranges hang on the trees almost the year round; the magnolia shows its beautiful white flowers; roses were almost everywhere along the way. Blackberries were ripe—in April! Further up the country are prairie lands, where herds of beef-cattle and hardy ponies abound. During this campaign, sixty-nations, save coffee, were missed dreadfully; vast potatoes and fruits were our staples. In the bayous, great alligators sunbathed and paddled. All along the Teche were the homes of wealth and luxury—stately white mansions, the broad plantation lands stretching in front, their rear verandas overhanging the stream, which was often arched over by the branches of trees meeting overhead. Hundreds of our had probably reached this Arcadian region in such a hostile army should ever invade it had not been accounted to be within the bounds of possibility. It was upon those scenes that our army came in those April days, and hastily was the cup and hand of war laid upon this people. With the best of discipline—as an army, some lawlessness and pillage will ever prevail, and the people she fled at oppressed in many cases found their houses stripped and in disorder on their return. A large proportion of these people were of French extraction, and the sight of the tri-color flag from a window was a common one as we passed. But to no class of the population did our invasion bring such astonishment and joy as to the negroes. When it is remembered that in 1860 this class numbered the whites in number in Louisiana, a fitting idea may be formed of the scenes that were continually occurring along our march. The negro in Louisiana is—or was—an African, with all that the name implies; uncouth, outlandish, with all the physical characteristics of his race in a state of great development. Frequently as we passed a plantation house there would be an irruption of fifty or a hundred darkies out into the road, and the soldiers' sense of the ludicrous would be gratified by gaitures, grimaces, kicking up of heels, and loud cries of "Bless de Lawd! See dem Linkum soldiers! O, Lawd God! bless yo' souls! Ole Mas'r Abum!" "Why, honey, dey have no horns and tails, as ole mass'r said!" And then would come a great chorus, "Wa'n gwine along wid yo' all? And the rear of the column would be closed by a dusky array of ex-slaves, rejoicing in their new-found freedom, scarcely knowing what to do with it, yet bound to follow the liberating host as long as permitted. I doubt if just such scenes, so perfectly unctuous of the negro character, were seen anywhere in the war out of Louisiana.

We passed through the village of Patterson, while toward evening, and bivouacked that night in the fields beyond. Many of the soldiers went down to the bayou for a wash, and, considering the clouds of dust and rural heats through which we labored for the next week, it was not at all amiss.

The camps were astir in good time the next morning, and, after coffee and hard-tack, the march was resumed. Upon exciting incidents occurred before our lines fairly got in range of the enemy's works. A mounted officer, with a glass, thought he observed some indications of a reconnoissance in the neighborhood of a large sugar-house, far up the road. A section of one of our batteries was brought to the head of our column and a shell sent screaching for a mile. A dozen men were seen, by the glass, to run out of the building, mount their horses, which were hitched near by, and ride off at a gallop.

Further on, a round-shot was sent at some suspicious appearances, and I plainly saw it strike a large house. When our column reached this place there was a hall, and I was one of several who entered the house to observe the effects of this shot. They were admirable to behold. The missile had crashed completely through the building, not under the mark, but tearing off basinets of lath and plastering, and scattering them over the long table which had been set for dinner. One of the negroes told us that the family were just seated at the board when this unwelcome messenger came, and that they all fled in panic across the bayou.

By the middle of this afternoon it was evident that we were drawing upon dangerous ground. We advanced slowly, often in line; we often halted, for cautious reconnoissances; our gunboats in the bayou threw an occasional shell. Before sunset we were advancing only in line, searing up every light of a rabbit, and moving forward before us. Never having been in action, though I had been eighteen months in the service, and not then understood all the signals of battle, I afterward, those movements somewhat puzzled me, while it was a very picturesque sight to see the brigade, with its alternate columns and lines, and regimental lines over the fields, banners flying, and musket-barrels shining, and, I looked decidedly pretty, and I thought it only needed the burst and swell of military music to make it very like what is called the pomp and circumstance of glorious war." Too sun was down, and twilight had come on while our march in line was proceeding. All of a sudden there came the roar of two cannon in quick succession, the balls flying high overhead; and at the signal the enemy opened on us from several batteries. From the noise, the smoke and the dust that followed, I should say that there were fully twenty-five guns engaged on during night. We were well in range, in fact, I believe that had they opened on us half an hour sooner they would have done better execution. As it was, it is generally with detached battlefield fire, most of their missiles flew high overhead.

One-half of all the error and confusion that has arisen out of the dispositions relating to battles of this war proceeds from the fact that soldiers will persist in attempting to describe what they never saw and had personally. The area of ground any battle which lie man with the musket, his Captain, or even his Colonel, can see is a very limited one, and so it was at Bisland. The things that I saw and heard there I will describe; those that I heard I saw not heard other people tell of. When that amazing uproar broke out for a front of, and in an instant filled with the hum that hissed, whistled, screached, and howled, so that, for a time, the soldiers stood from intuition, without order, and looking about them, as if to say, "What is this, anyhow?" I glanced back to see what was behind me, and I saw the Twenty-first Battery had galloped up, and was unlimbering just in our rear. At that instant one of the battery horses flew off to the march, in a way that seemed perfectly inexplicable. The animal had been struck by a shell, and scattered in every direction. Right before our line was one of the great plantation ditches, full seven feet deep, that cross the country. Somebody, I suppose it was General Weitzel, our brigade commander, was heard to shout, "Forward, and take the infantry lie down." We did not need to be told twice. The musketeers, and some men got into that ditch with great promptness, and lying there for the next hour, legs, arms, muscles, and bodies in consolable of a tangle, had a fine opportunity for reflection.

My own thoughts had a ridiculous aspect of the situation. I had wished to participate in a battle, just as all green soldiers do. I had pictured it in my mind, and, how it would feel to be in a battle. I had pictured what we should discharge, perhaps the bayonet, and what we should risk. It never occurred to me, generally, Well—lord we were in a battle—that is, we were under fire while the utility of both sid a was fight-ing over us.

My impressions of that hour need not be lengthy. Fifty pieces of cannon make a great noise, and the continual hurtling of the shot, and the continual bursting of shell, give the impression of a very great tempest in air. The Captain of the battery just behind us made about all the impression upon me. I thought it quite unnecessary, and, and I mentally yelled and swore at him, and though they were not doing all that men could, fly and by I became convinced of a movement among the ditch on our right; soldiers seemed to be climbing out, and correctly supposing that there were orders to do so, our officers repeated the order. We got out on the same side that we got in, twenty battery in front, and were soon going to the rear; we were ordered to form line, and we did so with some confusion, the enemy's balls still cutting the air overhead, and our officers being in an uncomfortable near our left. We retired about half a mile over the fields and prepared to bivouac for the night.

The morning report showed we had been in a battle and got whipped, was soon plainted. We had merely been "feeling of the enemy; had drawn their fire, developed their position, and in the morning should go back and open the fight in earnest.

Here we lay in our blankets all night, in darkness; fires could not be allowed in such a situation. I recall two incidents of the time: One was the receipt of a letter mail, out of which we were compelled to read our letters home from home by the lightful of a stray pikle, who came upon the scene about midnight, probably searching for forage and the rum, and probably he provoked as he rambled around among the ranks of sleepers are vivid in my memory. Just here I may mention a case of comfortable occurring at this battle. After we had retreat Lieutenant H—— was missing, though he had been seen to leave the ditch. He was not with us at all the next day; but he was heard of some days later, far to the rear, with some Quartermaster's train. He complained that he had been so entirely deaf by that dread-ful artillery. He was kindly allowed to rest.

The next morning the infantry was ordered up to about the position of the night before, and remained there all day, merely supporting the guns. The Seventy-fifth New York was at one time sent up to the enemy at the left, and got a position where its muskets could be used, but all infantry soldier who fired a bullet at Bisland was an exception. All day long the tremendous uproar of artillery went on, and continued at night. The gunboats on the bayou, two on one side and one on the other, changed their positions, places on the field the growing sugar-cane was trampled down, and the night was brilliantly lighted up by the flames of burning residents, set on fire by the shells; but there was everywhere noise, smoke, and confusion. During all day of this day my company was detached in charge of a section of Rodman's rifled guns, thirty-two pounders. All day long we have artillerymen kept in the rear, planting their round-shot most effectively, and often jumping up and cheering when an extra-good shot was made. Not a man of my company was hurt, though two were hit by spent fragments. In one regiment only two were killed and eight wounded, the loss in the whole division was small. Save in unusual cases this is the common result of an artillery battle. Shot and shell terrify and disconcert; but as a rule they do not hit a target in war.

Another night was passed in darkness, and with nothing to eat but a few hard-tack. A rumor went round that the infantry were to assault at daylight, and this pleasing prospect we slept as only wearied soldiers can sleep.

The morning brought a surprise. Fearful of being cut off by Grover's division, which had been sent around on both sides through the Grand Lake, the enemy threw from their battered fortifications, and from their camps, a terrific overwhelming cannon that our artillerists had dismounted, and, when the sun came up, they were marched down the abandoned works, and began the second day's tedious march and pursuit that lasted nearly a week.

My regiment passed the march directly through the beautiful grounds of the Bisland mansion, the shock of battle and arms chipped off by cannon-balls were everywhere.

Further on, the little building by the roadside that had been General Taylor's head-quarters was pointed out to me. I saw the dust that followed, I should say that there were fully twenty-five guns engaged on during the engage-ment that in fact, I believe that had they opened on us half an hour sooner they would have done better execution. As it was, it is generally with detached battlefield fire, most of their missiles flew high overhead.

FAREWELL TO LOGAN.

Impressive Services Over the Dead Statesman in the Senate Chamber.

His Civil and Military Career Eloquently Eulogized by Rev. Dr. Newman.

The Remains Escorted to Rock Creek Cemetery by a Long Procession.

Solemn and impressive funeral services over the remains of Senator Logan were held in the Senate Chamber at Washington on the last day of the year. There was a great throng of people present. The Rev. Dr. Newman preached the funeral sermon. The President was not able to be present, but Mrs. Cleveland was present, as well as members of the Cabinet and their wives. All the Senators were present except Senator Hale. Among the prominent men were several Chinese House Cooking Posttraction Gen. and Vice, Fred D. Grant, and Senator Stanford.

To the Sculptor's soft good-night strain, poet as he was, Logan's life was a stirring one, full of incidents, and his career was as much the beauty of character, and power of passion, as of the poet. He was a soldier, statesman, orator, and the pageantry of war. The cemetery where Logan was laid to rest is located near the tomb of Senator Stanford, and near the tomb of Senator Hoar. Thither the casket was borne in the hearse, followed by a long procession of carriages, in which one summer's day more than twenty years ago, Logan, with his wife and two little children, rode to the cemetery between packed ranks of his fellow-citizens, who had come to pay their last respects to the man who was the idol of the people. Thousands of people were there to see the funeral cortège pass by, and, as the hearse passed, many uncovered their heads, and some shed tears. The casket was then unveiled, and the coffin was lowered into the vault, and the cemetery was closed, and the vault was sealed, and the casket was placed in the vault

HONEY ANTS.

They Are Very Intelligent Insects, and Are Also Addicted to Eat.

"Dine with me to-day," said a friend, "and I will promise you something new, a house bouche never dreamed of in your philosophy." I did not believe it, but accepted the invitation, with the understanding that the line was to be drawn at mountain lion or magpie, and that Chinatown was not to be drawn on.

The dinner was served, and, by way of dessert, the mikado in attendance brought in a silver salver, upon which rested some objects that I assumed to be extraordinarily large currants, of rich amber hue. My friend took one, and I observed that it attempted to escape as he passed it to his mouth and bit off the amber-hued globe as he would a cherry. As he did so a look of extreme bliss passed over his face, fading away, only to be followed by another as he repeated the operation.

Not to be outdone, I also took up one of the objects, which was a squirming ant, swallowed it, and became conscious of having eaten a drop of honey, sweet and agreeable, though the fact that each morsel was obtained only by the sacrifice of a defenseless insect was somewhat of an objection. This slaught'er of the innocents continued for a few moments, when my friend scraped together a small monument of heads and, gazing at them reflectively, asked me how I felt.

"I brought these," he continued, "from way down in southern California, on the edge of Mexico, where they live. They cost me about a cent apiece, and I propose to introduce them among my friends. In Mexico they are considered a great dainty. I first saw them in Old Mexico, where I was stopping, and one day, in lunching with a friend, he ordered a plate of them, and, to tell the truth, I would have given a $5 bill rather than to have eaten one, nor it would have seriously offended my Mexican friend to have refused, so I shut my eyes and went it blind, literally, and after the first one I was well contented to eat a dozen, as if you can overcome the idea of eating a living creature you are all right.

"My host observed my modesty and laughed at me. 'You Americans are curious people,' he said. 'I have seen you watch a man stab a delicate oyster, and while in its death-struggles sauden it with condiments, a process as cruel as throwing a human being upon burning coals, yet you object to a single ant that is so surcharged with honey, so replete with the delights of honey, that it is insensible to pain.' In short, I became a convert, and after that I could never get enough. You see, we have a precedent in locusts and wild honey, and the locust was and is an extremely disagreeable-looking object, and the wild honey was not as sweet as this."

The ants thus served up by my epicurean friend were the famous honey ants found—from Mexico to Colorado—in this country and in the east, and, while all ants are remarkable for their seeming intelligence these present certain features almost beyond belief, and when their story was first told in scientific quarters by Dr. Norman, Wesmael, and others it was considered by many as a huge hoax, avended by some fun-loving naturalists as a joke—of too far-reaching interest in economics.

The honey ant is a small red insect, extremely demonstrative and active, and found particularly in Texas and Mexico, and in considerable numbers in Colorado. Their nests are prominent mounds in some cases and again are low heaps, spread over an area twenty or thirty feet, forming a community. As a rule they are nocturnal, working at night, though I have seen them at work in the bright sunlight at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and marching in a line, perhaps seven feet wide and forty feet in length, to a cotton-wood tree, up which they passed,—long and slender—coming down larger and full of pure white liquid.

It would strike even a casual observer as curious that these ants were carrying home a liquid that could hardly be stowed away, ants not having, as a rule, storehouses for liquid provisions; but the honey set overcomes this difficulty in a novel manner. Certain of the ants, either by agreement or selection, are utilized as receptacles for the honey-food supply, and become literally honey bottles. They are kept by the others in a separate apartment, about six inches long by four in height, that is a store-room. Here, if the nest is carefully opened, the ants or honey bottles will be seen hanging on the wall, looking like ripe currents.—San Francisco Call.

A Curious Bird.

What is the Bison, Andy Humbolldt in his travels in South America records a visit to Caripe, where is the cavern of the guacharo bird. The name which the cavern bears signifies the "mine of fat," because from the young of the birds which inhabit it an immense quantity of fat is annually obtained. These birds are about the size of our common fowl, with wings which expand to three feet and a half. All day long they dwell in the cavern, and, like our owls, only come forth at night. They subsist entirely on fruits, and have very powerful beaks, which are necessary to crack the rough nuts and reels which form part of their food. Midsummer is the harvest time for the fat. The Indians enter the cavern armed with long poles; the nests are attached to holes in the roof about sixty feet above their heads; they break those with the poles, and the young birds fall down and are instantly killed. Underneath their bodies is a layer of fat, which is cut off, and is the object sought. At the mouth of the cavern huts are erected of palm leaves, and there, in pots of clay, the natives melt the fat which has been collected. This is known as the butter of the cavern; it is so pure that it may be kept for upwards of a year without becoming rancid. At the convent of Caripe no other oil is ever used in the kitchen of the monks.

A Young Man Tries Farming.

Almost every one has heard the story Mark Twain tells about Henry Ward Beecher when the latter first indulged in the luxury of amateur farming. The great preacher bought a pig for $5, for it $10 worth of corn, and then sold it for $6. He said he made no pig, but lost on the corn. A similar experience befell two of my friends in Jersey who came to the conclusion they would improve the back part of their lots. They are young men with plenty of business on hand, and so could not work the garden growing luxuriously. The other day one of them made a statement of expenses and gains to find out how he stood with his farming experiment. He discovered that he had paid $35 for fertilizer, $15 for labor, had sworn 500 times at his neighbors' chickens, had quarreled twice on this account, was sued once for killing two cats, was mobbed for kicking a dog out of his tomatoes, and had for his gains one mess of garden peas, five tomatoes, one dozen ears of corn, and a prospective pock of potatoes. After this my younger friend will plant his farm in lawn grass and attend the market for his best vegetables.—Lancaster Examiner.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease, any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headaches and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of modern life are unnecessarily caused by a disordered liver and sluggish bowels, which inhabit it an immense quantity of fat is annually obtained. These birds are about the size of our common fowl, with wings which expand to three feet and a half. All day long they dwell in the cavern, and, like our owls, only come forth at night. They subsist entirely on fruits, and have very powerful beaks, which are necessary to crack the rough nuts and reels which form part of their food. Midsummer is the harvest time for the fat. A NEW LEASE OF LIFE.

When one has been suffering the agonies of a severe attack of rheumatism, neuralgia or sciatica, and relief comes, it seems as if a new lease of life had been granted. Such have been the feelings of thousands who, after trying physicians and numberless remedies, have said Athlophoros and found to their great joy that this medicine really did cure their disease.

August 10th, 1886.

Louis Schmidt, harness maker at Watertown, Wis., said to our correspondent, "While I cannot say Athlophoros has cured me of my rheumatism, it has been a great benefit and has relieved me very much. I have been subject to the rheumatism for the past six years; many times afflicted so that I could not work. I first used Athlophoros about three months ago and experienced very quick relief. I used in all about six bottles." Where did you first learn of this medicine was asked? "It was recommended to me through Mr. Edwards' one, a farmer living about ten miles from here. He was much worse than me. Used only three bottles and was completely cured. I consider it the best medicine I ever used and expect to use more of it."

Sturgis, Mich.

I have had an excellent sale for Athlophoros from the time of its first introduction and in every case with most satisfactory results. I call to mind one case in particular of a young lady afflicted with rheumatism who had been treated by best physicians in Kalamazoo, but was obtained relief by using Athlophoros upon recommendation. I have no hesitation in pronouncing it a specific in most cases of rheumatism and neuralgia.

H. J. Kelsey, Druggist.

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, and there they cannot be bought of the druggies the Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send either, carriage paid, on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 50c. for Pills.

For liver and kidney diseases, dyspepsia, rheumatism, nervous debility, diseases of women, constipation, headache, impure blood, &c., Athlophoros Pills are unrivaled.

Home After Business Hours.

The road along which the man of business travels is not a macadamized one, nor does it ordinarily lead through pleasant scenes and by well-springs of delight. On the contrary, it is a rough and rugged path, beset with "wait-a-bit" thorns, and full of pitfalls, which can only be avoided by the watchful care of circumspection. After every day's journey over this worse than rough turnpike road the wayfarer needs something more than rest; he requires solace and he deserves it. He is weary of the dull prose of life and athirst for the poetry. Happy it is the husband who can find that solace and that poetry at home. Warm greetings from loving hearts, fond glances from bright eyes, the welcome shouts of children, the many thousand little arrangements for our comfort and enjoyment that silently tell of thoughtful and expectant love, the gentle ministrations of that disencumber us into an old and easy seat before we are aware of it, these and like tokens of affection and sympathy constitute the poetry which reconciles us to the prose of life.

Think of this, ye wives and daughters of business men! Think of the toils, the anxieties, the mortifications and wear that father's undergo to secure for you comfortable homes, and then compensate them for their trials by making them happy by their own firesides.—Exchange.

Shopping-Girls' Trials.

Miss Apple, at Wannamaker's, who has been thirty years behind the counter, and is probably the best known saleslady in Philadelphia, strikes one of the most interesting phases of the subject when she says: "The greatest burden we have to bear is the bundles. Heavy? Why, the women in front of the counter make life hard for the women behind it. 'Girl, give me a bundle,' is the quick about it,' says an overbearing woman, handing to the counter. 'What kind of a pin do you desire, madam? We have many varieties,' says the girl, with displeased politeness. Such people need just such a 'taking down.' Saleswomen do not object to being kept busy; it is the idiocies they dislike. If we knew what they would not want us. Giddy girls never amount to anything and never stay long in stores. The greatest trouble they have is lack of adaptability. They can't turn themselves around to suit the convenience of customers. A girl may be good at one thing and be good at another. There is little or no dishonesty among girls. The best of sellers are often poor cashiers. Some girls are cross as a bear—and vice versa. The pay generally—all stores is inadequate."—Philadelphia Times.

Punishment by Electricity.

A savant named Henri Roget, hailing from Lyons, has invented a novel battery. He has a patent to apply it as a substitute for the cat-o-nine-tails in corporal punishment. The outfit is simple enough. The culprit is connected with the whip, which consists of a number of steel wires covered with a sponge. This whip is dipped in water before the stroke is administered, and wherever the wet wires touch an electric discharge takes place. The inventor claims that the chastisement can be made so mild as not to injure a schoolgirl, while, on the other hand, by increasing the power of the battery, a punishment can be administered beside which the sensation of being sawed in half is a play, and at the same time no injury is inflicted. The Augustine spectacle of a lacerated back is avoided, and the culprit, instead of being sent to the hospital to have his wounds healed, can be put to work in five minutes after the flogging is over. Quite a triumph of civilization!

The Occupations of Great Men.

The Medical Age has been investigating this subject and says that the father of Demosthenes was a blade smith; of Euripides, a dealer in vegetables; of Socrates, a mediocre sculptor; of Epicurus, a shepherd; of Virgil, an innkeeper; of Horace, the son of a wool carder; Shakespeare, of a butcher; Luther, of a miner; Cromwell, of a brewer; Sixtus V., of a swineherd; Linnaeus, of a poor country minister; Franklin, of a soap boiler; Rousseau, of a watchmaker, and Murat, of an inkeeper. The writer concludes that the occasions of these men may have been the source from which their genius was derived, and, indeed, it is known that some of them were women of more than ordinary excellence.

Railroad Notes.

At the adjourned meeting of our citizens last Monday afternoon, for the purpose of completing the organization of the railroad, reports of the surveying party were heard, setting forth that they had gone over the country from East Jordan to Alba, and had found a perfectly feasible and comparatively direct line. They had not gone over the other route to Mancelona.

In the discussion to name the road we be found via Bellaire and Mancelona, but the surveyors had not made an examination of the country.

The resolution to incorporate presented at the first meeting was taken from the table and passed, and a committee appointed to draft articles of incorporation.

It was decided to name the association Detroit, Charlevoix & Escanaba R. R. company. The terminal points of the railroad were named as Charlevoix and Grayling, a distance of about 70 miles. It will pass through Ironton and East Jordan and will cross the G. R. & I. at Mancelona or Alba, as may seem most practical.

As soon as the papers are filed with the secretary of state the company will be ready to begin operations.

Roswell Leavitt, of Bellaire, presented the interests of his town, and desired that, if possible, the road be built via Bellaire and Mancelona. An expression from those present favored that route, other things being equal.

It now remains for the property owners along the proposed route to come forward with their subscriptions to stock, and grants of right of way, for it is clearly apparent to us that on this will depend the definite location and final completion of the road.

A largely attended railroad meeting was held at Bellaire, Tuesday evening. Committees were appointed to make examinations of a possible route from the G. R. & I. to Bellaire and on to Charlevoix. Other things being equal, the opinion prevailed that it would be well to collect sufficient information concerning the proposed route, to enable the committee to fairly set forth the advantages of a route to Bellaire. The cases with which one could be constructed, and the benefits that would accrue to the road. Those familiar with the country state that a comparatively level line can be found from Bellaire to Charlevoix, via East Jordan.—Breeze.

Bellaire has held a meeting, appointed committees, and proposes to co-operate with Charlevoix in build ing the railroad to Grayling. Bellaire thinks that by means of Antrim county, is a very desirable point to touch, and we are assured that no intervening county seat will not present serious obstruction in the matter of heavy grades.

The Alma, Maple Rapids & Lansing railroad is a new project, and will be an extention of the Alma stub of the Detroit and Northern branch. Maple Rapids is boosting the proposed road, which if built, will run the Tuscola, Saginaw & Muskegon road about 12 miles north of Ithaca at Perrin.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Grayling people can afford to do something handsome to help Charlevoix build her railroad. It will prove a great an increased business of a permanent character.

Roswell Leavitt, of Bellaire, was in town three or four days this week, talking railroad, and was present at the meeting on Monday afternoon.

The "Detroit, Charlevoix, and Escanaba R. R. Co." is what the new road to Charlevoix is to be called.

The Tragic Side of Mrs. Malaprop.

It was not long before she (an educated American admiral of her family) approached her master and in a panic of some—one of not unusual occurrence in that household—said to her:

"It was because you went into the parlor and he heard you talk that he stays away. He is not used to it. He will never come here any more."

"I know I ought not to have done it. I will not disgrace you again," remarked the mother, accepting the charge with a full measure of abject humility.

"—I did not mean that," said the daughter, a little staggered herself at this way of putting it. "But, O, why would you not learn when I tried so hard with you"—and she broke into hysterical sobs—"not to use long words, and not to say, 'I done it,' and 'I seen it,' and 'them are,' and—and—just a few others?" cumming up with a definite notion her poor attempt to shelve this source of her chagrin.

"Don't cry so, dear, I will try—I will try," protested the listener.—Golden Justice.

A man claiming to be the perpetrator of the recent dynamite outrage on a cable road in San Francisco has written to a newspaper in that city that the responsible parties are members of an organization formed in Chicago directly after the Haymarket explosion.

Some genuine Manitoba weather was experienced in sections of the West and Northwest last week. At St. Cloud and Alexandria, Minn., the thermometer registered 40 degrees below zero, at Albert Lea 40, at Benson 36, and at Miles City, Mont., 30. Throughout Michigan the temperature was 20 to 25 degrees below zero.

The Attorney General of Ohio has brought suits in ejectment against squatters on canal property in Akron, valued at $500,000.

The report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction of Dakota makes a good showing. The value of the permanent school property in Dakota is about $3,000,000. It has increased from less than $40,000 in 1873. There were in June last 103,382 school children.

WASHINGTON.

The Comptroller of the Currency feels compelled to take action against officers of called bonds owned by the national banks, to the amount of $5,000 of matured 3 per cents deposited to secure circulation.

The House Committee on Civil Service Reform instructed Chairman Cox to report favorably the Senate bill to repeal the tenure-of-office act.

The Secretary of the Treasury has appointed Herbert F. Boecker to be a special agent of the Treasury. He is a son of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, and was formerly Collector of Customs at Port Townsend, Washington Territory.

Frank B. McDonald, son of ex-Senator McDonald of Indiana, died in Washington last week.

The second day's session of the Indiana Legislature was attended by a series of partisan wrangles. The Democratic Senate declined to meet the Republican House in joint session to hear the Governor's message, it having come to their ears that the Republican managers had planned a coup d'etat to be sprung upon the Senate. In consequence, the Governor did not deliver his message orally, as usual, but sent printed copies of it to each branch of the General Assembly. The Senate adopted a resolution declaring that that body recognized no vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor prior to the last election, and refusing to join in the canvass of the vote for the candidacy for the office. The Republican majority of the House, in retaliation for the rules adopted by the Senate, adopted a set of regulations fully as arbitrary as those of the upper body. The effect in either house will be that the majority can summarily and quickly unseat any member of the minority, wrightfully or wrongfully.

The bill to give Mrs. Logan a pension of $5,000 per annum meets opposition from General Matson, of Indiana, Chairman of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions.

POLITICAL.

William M. Stewart (Republican) has been elected to the United States Senate from Nevada. He will succeed Mr. Fair (Democrat).

In each house of the Missouri Legislature a bill has been introduced for the submission to the people of the question of prohibiting the liquor traffic.

The Pennsylvania Legislature has chosen Matthew S. Quay to succeed John I. Mitchell in the United States Senate from that State.

The Republican Congressional Convention at Eau Claire, Wis., nominated Hugh J. Price for the short term, and Nels F. Hanson for the long term, made vacant by the death of the late Congressman Price. Renominee for the short term is a son of the latter. Hanson is a Norwegian, and ex-State Railroad Commissioner.

The Governor of Indiana reports the total debt of that State at $4,000,000. The Insane Hospital consumes about one-fourth the entire revenue of the State.

The new Governor of Massachusetts, in his inaugural message, takes a somewhat novel position in the matter of temperance. Instead of advocating a prohibition amendment to the State Constitution, as it was expected he would do, he recognizes license as the law of the State, and recommends that the number of license issued in cities shall be restricted to narrow limits by law, and that by law also the fees for licenses shall be greatly increased. This scheme can hardly be said to be a practical one, as it would at once create a monopoly in the liquor business by law which could not help but become unpopular.

In the Indiana House of Representatives, on the 10th inst., Speaker Sayre announced "the Senate" immediately after prayer, and the nineteen Republican members of that body entered and took seats on the Speaker's right. The attempt of Democrats to secure the attention of the Speaker were futile, and the vote of the recent election was canvassed, the Speaker next making the announcement that Mr. Robertson had been elected Lieutenant Governor. The latter was sworn in by Judge Walker, of the Supreme Court, and proceeded to deliver his inaugural address amid the greatest noise and confusion. After announcement had been made that the joint convention would meet Jan. 19 to ballot for United States Senator, the House adjourned. The entire proceedings were characterized by the wildest disorder. Representative Jewett, the Democratic leader, excitedly protested against Robertson presiding over the chair, declaring that he had no authority, even as Lieutenant Governor, to do that. Nearly the whole of the Democratic representation on the floor started their protests against what they denounced as a high-handed outrage. "The rag-tag and bob-tail of the Senate," said one, "have come in here and claim to be the Senate. Against such brutal, cowardly, and unconstitutional action I enter my solemn protest."

The $1,500 mortgage on the home at Leavenworth, Kan., of Mrs. Watkins, mother of the express robber, has been paid off, the Adams Express Company, as alleged, furnishing the money.

The election of Roscoe Conkling as successor to Senator Senator New Jersey by the joint vote of Democrats and Republicans is urged by the World.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

Carnegie Bros. & Co.'s steel works at Braddocks, Pa., have resumed operations, an advance in wages of about 22 per cent having been granted the employes.

A strike of all the employes of the Consolidated Horse Railway lines in Boston occurred last week.

A Lutheran clergyman of Oshkosh, Wis., devoted his last sermon to the Knights of Labor, and warned the members of his church that they will be expelled if they cling to the order.

RAILROAD INTELLIGENCE.

It is stated that the Grand Trunk road will shortly be connected with Duluth.

Receiver Cooley, of the Wabash Railway, has appointed Richard J. Rosse Purchasing Agent. It is understood that Mr. Rosse will also be tendered the position of general Traffic Manager in the place of William Duncan.

The New York, Chicago & St. Louis road for the past year expended $500,000 in improvements on the Hannibal and St. Joseph branch.

Railroad interests at St. Louis have for some time been negotiating for the abolition of tolls on the Bridge, in the hope of making that city the terminus of several east-bound lines.

Joliet business men want the Santa Fe Railroad shops established there. There is a fight between the Zanesville and Ohio, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Cincinnati and Muskingum Railroads over the right-of-way along the Zanesville Canal bank.

Tracklaying on the Mexican International Railway is proceeding at the rate of a mile a day.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Americans visiting the continent of Europe will do well to provide themselves with passports. A Washington special says:

The Secretary of State has received dispatches from Minister Pendleton, United States chargé-general at Berlin, setting forth the annoyance to which United States citizens visiting Europe, and especially Germany, subject themselves by not having with them some official identification papers. For instance, Frankfort, Hamburg, Leipsic and other cities in the German Empire are authorized to "expel from the state of siege," and every stranger or transitory visitor who is found to be without identity himself by producing a passport, liable to be so expelled. Instances are cited where, not of a stranger, but of a native, the demand the production of a passport, and if he is not provided with one he was either prosecuted or at the nearest United States legation or consular agency procured, or, if not a newspaper

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

In the Indiana Senate, on the 11th inst., Lieutenant Governor Robertson was admitted, but made no formal demand for possession of the chair. Senator Harrison, as acting president, ruled that it would only be proper for the Senator to take a seat in progress. A resolution was adopted by the Senate inviting the House to meet in the Senate Chamber on the 18th inst. for the election of a United States Senator. An Indianapolis dispatch says:

The day's work simplifies the situation to the extent that it makes it practically certain that there will be two separate joint conventions held. That in the House, presided over by Robertson, will elect Ben Harrison a United States Senator. The other, in the Senate, presided over by Green Smith, will elect a Democrat, in all probability James E. McDonald. The Democrat will make a contest in the lobby, but the Democrats are not very hopeful of success, and Harrison will be left in his seat. The Democrats will, however, endeavor to fortify their position by securing a decision from the Supreme Court of the State, declaring that the recent election for Lieutenant Governor was void and illegal.

The Wisconsin Legislature organized by the election of T. B. Adams, Speaker of the House, and E. K. Erwin, President pro tem. of the Senate. Both are Republicans. The West Virginia Legislature chose Democratic officers. Geo. E. Price was made President of the Senate, and Alex. R. Boreman Speaker of the House. The organization is said to be favorable to Senator Camden's re-election. The Arkansas House of Representatives chose John M. Hewitt Speaker, after an exciting contest lasting two days. He was opposed by the "Wheelers" and Republicans. Hewitt was Captain of a Federal company of Confederate deserters during the war, and made a brilliant record as a fighter. He must select supporters were ex-Confederate officers. The Kansas House of Representatives elected A. W. Smith Speaker. The South Dakotans achieved a victory in the organization of the Dakota Legislature. C. Gross, of Hyde County, was chosen Speaker.

The dynamite factory at Plattsburg, New York, was destroyed by an explosion which shook buildings at Burlington, Vermont.

Prince Komatsu of Japan has arrived at Berlin. He has the largest train of attachants on record.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill in the Senate, on the 10th inst., to readjust the boundaries of the Freedmen's Bank of Washington. The Senate passed a substitute for the House bill for the relief of settlers on the public domain with homestead entries, and the House agreed to the conference report on the Senate amendments to the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, which prohibits the Secretary of the Interior from exercising the power of suspension of patents for lands granted to the Pacific Railroads, and provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to cancel patents issued to the Pacific Railroad companies for lands which shall be found to be not mineral in character. In the case of Kidd vs. Steele of Indiana, the Senate passed a resolution of the Judiciary Committee to the effect that neither is entitled to a seat in Congress. The House passed a resolution authorizing the Speaker to appoint the Committee on Ways and Means, and Mr. Morrison moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill appropriating $2,000 to aid in the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the first settlement of the Northwest Territory. Mr. Morrill, of Kansas, introduced a resolution to place homer and oil on the free list, and to reduce the duty on sugar. A message from the President of Cape of Good Hope was introduced by Mr. Hale, transmitting the report of the Commissioners, appointed by that colony, to report on the Zulu war. Mr. Beck introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Prince Rhodes Island cash, a majority report from the Committee on Ways and Means favored that neither is entitled to a seat in Congress. THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Detroit is soliciting subscriptions for a new $500,000 hotel.

Muskegon and Marquette expect soon to become free delivery post-offices.

Will C. Graves, of Grand Rapids, well known here in Charlevoix, has been elected secretary and treasurer of the Grand Rapids press club.

The house has voted, by the requisite constitutional majority, to submit a prohibitory amendment to the people at the spring election. The republicans present, with one exception, voted solidly for it, the unanimity on their part showing that with them it was not a question of personal approval of having the constitution amended, but of assumed party expediency.

When Col. Stockbridge takes his seat beside Senator Tom Palmer in the United States senate, Michigan will be represented in that body by two of her wealthiest citizens. Being one of the richest states in the union, there is a certain propriety in sending men who are several times millionaires to represent it in the branch of congress which is made up chiefly of men of high financial standing. It is money that gives a man weight in the senate now-a-days. Brains are regarded as a vulgar commodity, the stock in trade of impecunious newspaper writers and such trash, and are naturally at a discount in the American House of Lords.—Mining Journal.

The Burden of an Indirect Tax.

The amount of taxation that the people pay without really knowing that they are paying it is well shown by a recent letter from the proprietors of the Revere Sugar Refinery, of Boston,—one of the largest in the country—to the Springfield Republican. What called out the letter was the suggestion by a Boston protectionist of a doubt whether the American sugar refiner sells sugar to foreigners for $2.60 less per hundred pounds than to American consumers. The refiners give assurance that such is a fact or nearly so, the foreign buyer getting his granulated sugar at the date of the letter for $3.25 per hundred pounds, while the American buyer paid $5.85. Having thus indicated some of the sweets—to the consumers—of the protective tariff, the sugar refiners continue:

Sugar is in no sense an article of luxury; it is to day a prime necessity as an article of food for the cheapest fed people in this country. A few years ago in collecting statistics on this point we found that in such manufacturing centers as Lowell and Fall River in this state and Lewiston in Maine, all of the factory boarding houses without a single exception paid more per annum for sugar than for flour, and in some of the boarding houses the price for board was as low as $1.75 per week. The facts and figures given above show what an outrageous tax is now imposed on this necessity of life, and yet the mass of the people do not realize its magnitude, but let this tax be collected by a stamp for the duty, purchased from the government by the consumer and by him affixed to his barrel of sugar, and a howl would go up all over this country that no congress however lethargic could withstand; granulated sugar is packed in barrels of various sizes but 250 pounds each is a low average, and taking $2.57 as the equivalent duty on 100 pounds, the consumer under the existing tax, would be compelled to buy and put on his barrel a stamp for which he must pay $6.43.—Detroit Free Press.

Of Interest to Northern Michigan.

Judge J. G. Ramsdell has handed the Grand Traverse Herald the following letter just received from Washington by him, which explains itself, and the importance of which to our fruit growers is very apparent. Northern Michigan exchanges will please copy.

U. S. DEP'T OF AGRICULTURE, / Division of Pomology, / Washington, D. C., Dec. 30, 1886.

JUDGE RAMSDELL, Traverse City, Mich.

MY DEAR SIR—Knowing you to be interested in the fruit business, I address this to you with the desire that you have it published in the papers that will give it the widest circulation in your county. I am well and reliably informed, after careful investigations, that the apple crop of the pacific coast in the eastern states is exhausted, and the western apples are badly rotted. The apples in northern Michigan are in the best condition of any now to be had, and I advise persons, who are now holding apples for higher prices in the spring, I desire to officially announced this for the benefit of the growers. Shall be glad to have information and specimens of fruits or inquiries from any one interested in pomological matters.

Yours for the good of the fruit-grower,

H. E. VAN DEMAN,
Chief Division of Pomology,
U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

The Tariff Again.

The secretary of the treasury reports the surplus revenue for the last fiscal year at $49,405,545, and estimates that it will amount to $54,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1887. There is nothing truer than the fact that the removal of a part of the duty from iron, from clothing and other articles would so stimulate importations that the revenue from these sources would be greatly increased, instead of being reduced.—Chicago Journal.

If the statement is true that a reduction of the wet taxes would not only reduce the price of the protected articles to consumers, but would also increase the income of the government by causing an increase in importations, and thus creating a great increase in the volume of business, why is the reduction opposed? Is it simply because some of our congressmen wish to allow monopolists to continue to rob the people? Do they object to an increase in the volume of business.—Telegram Herald.

The Reward of Energy.

H. A. Wetmore is a Cheboygan banker, but he also has a farm in Cheboygan county, and it is a question which he is most proud of—the remarkable success of his bank since it was established, Jan. 8, 1885, or the remarkable vegetables he grows on the farm. In his banking office is a Swedish turnip "of his own rearing" that measures 37 inches in circumference and weighs 22 pounds, and he had others that filled a bushel basket on being cut up for stock. From three-fourths of an acre planted to corn June 12 he harvested 62 bushels of good corn Sept. 2; and from five acres sown to Hungarian grass June 20 he cut 15 tons of good hay, while from 25 acres of meadow he cut 45 tons of hay. All the crops were raised on new hardwood land from which the stumps have not yet been removed.

Two Rich Men's Bequests.

The will of John S. Newberry, of Detroit, is in marked contrast to that of Francis Palms. The latter left practically nothing to perpetuate his name in the city in which his vast wealth was accumulated. Mr. Newberry not only left a small amount in small sums to faithful employes, but bequeathed the bulk of his property to the trustees of the board of education of the Presbyterian church, and $5,000 to the Presbyterian board of publication for Sabbath school work, besides smaller amounts. The total amount specified is $80,000, while the total amount intended for benevolent purposes is much larger. His memory will be kept green in the hearts of the people of the beautiful City of the Straits.

Time to Cease.

When the democratic house of representatives passes a pension bill appropriating $76,000,000 for the year—more than the entire expenses of the government before the war—for all federal soldiers and their representatives, it is high time to cease talking of democrats as "rebels" or enemies of the government. But that political "property" will never do service in another campaign.—Boston Herald.

Quite a Circus.

It would be quite a circus to see the party of great moral ideas' voting for free whisky and unlimited tobacco, but it begins to look as if another month would vouchsafe the vision.—Washington Post.

Does It Pay?

Three-fourths of our people are troubled with dyspepsia or liver complaint in some form or other, which by nature of the disease has a depressing influence on the mind or body, preventing them from thinking or acting clearly in any matter of importance. Indigestion, coming up of food after eating, dyspepsia, sick headache, acidity of the stomach or any derangement of the stomach or liver (upon which the whole action of our system depends) are speedily and effectually overcome by the use of Dr. Pierce's Anti-Dyspepsia. The most stubborn cases have yielded to its influence, as thousands of letters received will testify. The immense sale of this medicine is another guarantee of its merits, over a million and a half bottles sold last year. So we ask, will it pay you to suffer from any of the above diseases when you can have immediate relief in the August Flower. Three doses will prove its worth. It is sold by all druggists and general dealers in all parts of the world. 50cts.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of crude medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Thousands of testimonials of cures, even of consumption, have poured in this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in asking our readers to try and venture on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crosier.

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has any equal as a remedy for Scrofula and humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, Sec. Lincoln, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know it to be valuable. I do not hesitate to recommend it to all suffering from this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Auesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying many remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 369 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Price, South Bradford, Mass.

If you have any black birch knots on your land, do not burn them up. The Northwestern Lumberman says a good trade has sprung up lately along the upper railroads for black birch knots and burls. It is the best paying business they have struck yet.—Independent.

The following from the Charlotte Leader will apply with equal force to the JOURNAL: "Metropolitan weeklies are furnished at one dollar per year. They can better afford to furnish their paper at that price than can we for $1.50, first, because their paper costs but little for composition, being made up largely from their dailies; secondly, because they obtain immense prices for the advertising they insert. The subscriber scarcely sees an item of news of their own locality in the metropolitan papers. We are frequently asked why we charge $1.50 for the Leader. The above is our answer."

A few days ago a prominent manufacturer while in conversation with a Democrat represent-tive while in Chicago remarked that the indications were good for a booming business the coming season. He said that iron has advanced 33½ per cent, and that a great many manufacturers had withdrawn all quotations made last fall and were not contracting at present prices for goods to be delivered during the year. A representative of a large wagon factory said that the iron alone on his wagons now cost $3 per wagon more than last year at this time.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The Goshen Democrat is responsible for the following: A Cheboygan Mich., woman thought she saw bear tracks on the ground under her hired girl's bedroom window, and not wishing to frighten the girl she set a large steel trap there without saying anything about it to anybody. She had retired for the night when she was startled by a series of yells which would have done credit to a band of Indian on the war path. Upon investigation she found her husband hopping around on one leg with the bear trap hanging to the other one. Her petition for divorce was on file before breakfast next morning.

Episcopal Services.

Bishop Gillespie visited Christ church mission on Sunday last. Services morning and evening in Odd Fellows' Hall. Full and hearty response and unitency in the prayers and praises of the occasion, prepared, appreciative, and interested congregations to hear and profit by two very excellent sermons, deep spiritual, and practical, in the bishop's earnest and impressive manner.

After the evening service, an after meeting was held, where the organization of Christ church mission was perfected. W. P. Brown was by ballot elected warden; Mrs. Geo. Hayles secretary; Geo. Bates, treasurer. It was thought best and desirable that divine service should be held at least once on each Lord's day, and that all should come with their children and such others as they could bring, and for the children instruction in the catechism, and for all others a sermon read or Bible in structions and studies. To that end the bishop licensed W. A. Brown a lay reader, and the warden superintendent and instructor, and appointed the first service at the residence of W. P. Brown on Sunday, the 23d inst, at 3:30 o'clock. Subject for study on that occasion, "The Christian Name." Text, St. John 10:3 "He calleth his own sheep by names."

Until further notice these services will be held at the same place and hour, and to them everybody is most cordially invited. There is a number of Sunday school library books, and books of instruction belonging to this mission in some of the families in town. Please look them up and bring them all in on Sunday next.

Historical Society.

The Historical Society met for the first time since the holiday recess at the home of Mrs. O. D. Wood, on Friday evening, the 14 inst. In spite of the weather, the spacious rooms were well filled, and the occasion was one of enjoyment to all.

Much credit is due Miss Flora Nelson for the able manner in which she presented the subject of the evening, "Alexander and his times."

The reading of Tennyson's "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After," by Miss Edith Hawkins and Mr. Al. T. Washburn were thoroughly enjoyable.

The music also as rendered by Misses Maggie Green and Alice Cochran was worthy of much commendation.

The next meeting will be held at the residence of Major Green, Friday evening, Jan. 21, when the action will be taken in reference to incorporation.

A paper upon "The Persian Invasion" will be presented by Miss Maggie O'Neill.

To the Public.

The comrades of Butter Post, No. 119, will give an entertainment or camp-fire at the opera house on Monday evening, Feb. 14th, 1887. The program will consist of camp scenes and songs; the manual of arms; the sabre and bayonet exercises. These exercises will be no new-fangled manuevers but such as were used in the days that tried men's souls. There will be an address by the Rev. W. H. McCartney. Also select music, both vocal and instrumental. The entire will be there with his wares. Hardtack and coffee will be furnished to all. Fifteen cents will be charged at the door.

Come and have a good time, and help the boys raise a little of the needful to plat and grade their cemetery.

Fourth annual report of the Bureau of Labor and Industrial Statistics, C. V. R. Pond, commissioner, Lansing, Mich.

It is reported that an aged citizen of West Salem township, Mercer county, Mass., is engaged in making his own coffin and hearse, and that he is building the post-humous articles regardless of expense. It is said that the old man conceived the idea out of pique at a remark of a neighbor "that when he died he wouldn't have money enough to bury him."

Dr. Pete's Magic Pain Oil is Good for both internal and external pain. Good for sprains, black and blue bruises, and swelling joints.

Good for wounds made by knives, scissors, and implements of destruction.

Good for neuralgia's twinges, and rheumatism's terrible torture. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crosier.

When the eye becomes weak or the lids inflamed and sore, a disordered system or a scrofulous condition of the blood is indicated, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best remedy. It invigorates and vitalizes the blood and expels all humors.

Job and Tin Work. L. D. BARTHOLOMEW & CO.

The Copyright Cryptogram.

The heavy profits made by Gilbert and Sullivan through "The Mikado" in this country, and the liberal gain thus which piracy of the opera has deprived them of, have led them into tremendous anxiety as to their next work and its protection. Sullivan consulted with lawyers while recently here on the question whether, if he were to become a naturalized citizen of the United States, he would lose his copyrights in England, in which case his music would be lost to him in that country, though Gilbert might still protect the words there, and they would not be available here without the notes. That scheme was abandoned. The present idea is to associate an American author in the next opera to a sufficient extent to let him copyright the work. As the portions written by him, distributed through the words and music, need not be disclosed until an action in court against infringers made it essential, it is thought that the device may prove effective. The new piece, which by contract is to be ready for production next October, is to present the story of an Egyptian girl, who learns that she is a descendant of an Egyptian princess, and undertakes to live up to her illustrious ancestry. The fun is to arise from the mixture of by-gone Egyptian and present English dress, customs, and usages. The satire is to be upon the commercial instincts of Englishmen in extending England's influence, and the plot is so far developed that the New York collaborer has received his assignment of several brief passages of dialogue and music to write. It does not follow that his small part of the work will remain as he provides it, but it will be enough his own to make it delectable.—N. Y. Sun.

A Georgia farmer, who was carefully raising a nice litter of Berkshire pigs, couldn't account for the disappearance of all but three. One day he heard one squeal shrilly in the air, and saw a big buzzard sailing off with it. The farmer shot the buzzard, and buzzard and pig both fell to the ground dead.

ALGER'S FAREWELL.

Message of Michigan's Retiring Governor to the State Legislature.

Condition of the State's Educational, Charitable, Reformatory, and Penal Institutions.

A Variety of Recommendations Fired at the Assembled Law-Makers.

Gentlemen of the Legislature:

The Treasurer's report shows that the State of Michigan owes $1,000, which will come due in 1891, and the Treasurer has in his possession $1,000 in coupon bonds to pay the principal and $60 to the amount of interest, which balances the account. In a word, however, it can be said that our State is practically out of debt; consequently nothing need be said of its credit, because it is as good as any. It is probable that it will ever have occasion to borrow again.

Our State institutions are, for the main, in excellent condition. The State University, Agricultural College, and Normal School all require appropriations for repairs, improvements and maintenance.

The Reform School for Boys, at Lansing, under the able management of Superintendent Gower, is doing a great work. I, however, recommend that the name be changed so as to strike out the word "Reform," for the reason that the institution cannot be an offense, it does no good, and the name of the institution can as well be omitted without the name in vogue.

The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian is doing a good work and is well managed.

The State Prison, in a measure, apply to that school, about what I have said in regard to the Reform School for the Reform School.

A very great wrong connected with this institution should be righted at once. While there are very many bad girls in the school, there are many who are there for no offense, and who are not even without parents, who are there simply because they have no friends. They are charged with "vagrancy," and with being "incorrigible," anything to cover under the letter of the law, that they are there by the order of a court, and that school without parents, who are there at loss of a least which affects her character, and will do no enlargeth life, as it is quite a mistake, and the innocent class referred to should be taken from that institution immediately. Several such girls have been sent home and recommitted to the Children's Home, which place they have been sent to on account of their homeless homes. I recommend the enactment of a law absolutely prohibiting the sending of any girl to that institution that has not a bad character. The Children's Home, which is a good, and much in place, in twelve years it has received nearly 1,500 children, and placed in homes over 1,200 of them. Its management, in my judgment, is as near perfection as possible.

The Soldiers' Home at Jackson is an "old trap," and ought to be thoroughly overhauled.

The Insane Asylum of Correction is in excellent condition.

The State Prison of the Upper Peninsula is in a satisfactory report, which is submitted. I second the request of the Board that further aid be extended.

The Schools for the Blind and Deaf and Dumb are doing a great work, and I recommend them to your cordial support.

THE INSANE.

The four Insane Asylums have made exhaustive reports of their conditions and doings. It will be noticed that requests are made for improvements, for the purchase of land, and for the building of cottages, all of which I approve of, and I recommend that the moneys are expended by the Board. Pontiac and Kalamazoo Asylums shall be taken care of, and the plus fund and no appropriation from the State asked for. At the rate charged for caring for patients during the present two prices of provisions quite a substantial saving is made, and it is out of this that it is recommended that the improvements asked for shall be made. The Upper Peninsula Asylum is doing a good and much greater than keeping patients in the main buildings, as cottages can be built for two hundred and fifty to three hundred dollars per patient, while the main buildings cost from one to two thousand dollars per patient; and besides, these cottages placed on farms give the patients work, which they can perform, and not only benefit themselves but contribute much toward their own support. The Asylum at Traverse City is, in construction and management, all that could be desired.

The Home for Feeble Minded Children is admirably managed, but its location, overlooking the prison yard as it does, is most unfortunate. I hope it will not be changed, but that it may be turned into a much needed prison for women, which institution is needed, and can be easily obtained, and be needed for the criminal insane.

I submit the report of the Mining School, and recommend it to your careful attention. The institution is young, but is growing in favor and great, although still in its infancy, that all that pertains to the scientific knowledge of mining it may be conversed. I trust you will deal liberally with it. This school has opened under the most favorable auspices, and already at the close of the first term is in admirable and extensive working order.

The report of the Board of Corrections and Charities is submitted herewith, and recommendations are made, among other things, those pertaining to our county jails and poorhouses, but I differ materially with them in some matters, and especially that contained in their report in reference to the jails of the counties. This board has found a great laxity in the method of doing business, and one which would should never obtain in any State institution respecting the expenditure of public moneys. I cannot, from the facts in my hands, think that there has been, so far as we know any wrong, except what may be considered such from the facts that the boards spend the moneys for purposes not authorized by any law. The law should be changed so as to compel them to which appropriations are made.

It is a delicate charge the Boards with misappropriation of moneys, although probably such is not its intention. The Boards of these differ-ent institutions are made up from the very best citizens of the State, who give their time and thought to the care of the unfortunate and the blacks, and simply from a desire to serve the State and do what good they can for the unfortunate inmates of them. They are in a large part through business men, and their judgment in the matter of the expenditure of moneys which cannot be provided for by special appropriation because unforeseen, should be either accepted by the State or else the system should be abolished or other men appointed to fill their places who will do business on a business basis. Institutions are disaster should some of these institutions any disaster should come of them be a breakage of machinery, loss of crops, such as fire, or even the death of a boiler, would be the work of the same? Under their plan of work, they have to empty the jails and the Legislature should meet and make an appropriation for the same, which appropriation, I am glad that it will be passed at the closing of Boards, in which case the State could not be the gainer, as they would have as much disorder as now. Contingencies for the expenditure of moneys for unforeseen purposes should be allowed to be used, and there is no way to meet such emergency but by giving to the Boards in charge discretionary power to a good extent.

I think it would be wise to enact a law requiring the Boards of Corrections and Charities to make an annual report of the moneys disbursed or accumulated balances into every dollar. I, for one, would like to see more in finances way. I believe the Board of Corrections and Charities are doing a good work in the State, and they deserve all they are accomplishing their greatest good in the care of our unfortunate jails and poorhouses, and I hope their powers and duties may be confined to the labor work, and that they may be prevented from looking after the State institutions.

The report of the Board of Pardons is submitted for the Soldiers' Home, and asks an appropriation. This Home was erected on a beautiful site near the city of Grand Rapids, which was purchased by its citizens at a cost of $10,000, and which, when the Board of Pardons appropriations were apportioned for the construction, building that would accommodate at least 300 people. This was invited by advertisement, and ranged from $10,381 to $60,000. The lowest bidder was accepted. The building was satisfactorily completed and dedicated, with appropriate ceremonies, on the 22d of May. The amount of the same was not taken into account, and it will require the sum of about $20,000 to meet that account. While the building tage of the State institutions outside of the State prisons have averaged to cost not over $1,000 for each person accommodated when they can fall, yet this one has cost, as you will see by the foregoing figures, not to exceed $50 for each person accommodate, and its construction and management have secure favorably with any erected by the State.

The House, since it was established, has accommodated a large number of old soldiers, and could not take all who applied although determined to accommodate as many as possible, and for their benefit, and the benefit of others, have been scattered around among loading houses since the law establishing it went into effect, and a visit to them will convince any one that it is a great need of the State to provide a home for them. Their condition is miserable beyond, and the State in its grateful should provide humanity for their care while they live. I have no doubt but fully as worthy of any veterans will need to be cared for when they have all passed away, and the State should provide for the future necessary, it will be a great and lasting one for the State to use either as an asylum or for other purposes. Other States have followed the example of Michigan in this matter, and I hope that this State will carefully look over the estimates required to carry it along, and give it your liberal support. A full report is submitted herewith. Many bills were introduced to the last Legislature in reference to the management of the railroads of the State. I am no advocate of railroads, but I think that they should be treated with fairness, and that the rates and the estimates can be boxed down by the use of the power of the State, in case they are wrong, they are very feeble, as a rule, and a great many of them are unable to perform any service of value.

The General Government has sent to the capital of the State an experienced meteorologist and Weather Signal Corps, and undertakes to give to the State and its citizens the benefit of their service. The expense has been changed so as to strike out the word "Reform," for the reason that the institution cannot be an offense, it does no good, and the name of the institution can as well be omitted without the name in vogue.

AFFAIRS OF STATE.

Governor C. G. Luce on Assuming Office.

Construction and Management of State Reformatory Institutions.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

By virtue of the constitution and laws of our commonwealth, I have been selected and authorized to speak in the name of a great people, who, through manhood suffrage, exercised by thrift, enterprise and liberal institutions claim a place in the front rank in the sisterhood of States. The instrument of government of which the diversity of property interests, the distribution of population, the social and industrial pursuits, the demand for new laws, the revision and amendment of those now existing, all combine to impose upon you, the Legislature, as well as upon other departments of our State government.

We meet at this time under favorable auspices. Peace and good order prevail throughout our borders, we are exempt from famine and pestilence, and beneath such providential care we have grown in population and in material wealth, and we are enjoying people, and in so doing it is meet and proper that we be properly acknowledged by the "Giver of all good" for the blessings and bounty bestowed upon us.

The Constitution requires both the retiring and incoming Governors to give to the Legislature information by message of the condition of the State, and to recommend such measures to them as shall to us seem necessary. My predecessor, who was so satisfactorily discharging the duties of the office of Governor for the last two years, has, doubtless, given you all the data and recommendations necessary for your guidance. But it would be expected of me, as executive of our commonwealth and entrusted with the duties of the office of Governor, to give to the coming Legislature, which are commended to your careful consideration.

We have been informed with the affairs of state for a brief period, yet during that time my duties have been such as to satisfactorily demonstrate the necessity of a change in the laws of our State. The State has been singularly guaranteed, and, upon request, receives, a full report of the condition of the State, and so thoroughly was it done, it is to be hoped that no material change will be made in the system.

There have been several commissions appointed by the Governor, during the past two years, to which I wish to call your special attention. They by call your special attention. They by call your special attention to the fact that the State has been saved a large amount of money, and, upon request, receive, a full report of the condition of the State, and so thoroughly was it done, it is to be hoped that no material change will be made in the system.

The Military Academy at Orchard Lake is, in a measure, a state institution receiving, however, no pecuniary aid from the State, save in chief, the Governor, who is a most excellent school. One can always detect a cadet from other boys in the vicinity of the school.

It is meet to encourage the young men who have taken advantage of the opportunity of a law to pursue authorizing the Executive to commission a number of young men to become officers in this State, without commission or pay, until they shall be of the age of twenty-one years.

I also recommend that the law include graduates of the Agricultural College, which has also an excellent military department, and which is a most worthy graduate of either institution and residents of the State.

The Soldiers' Home, which was erected in the field, building with the bayonets of different regiments, and which has been a great success, is now in need of repairs. Heretofore, this great institution has been kept in good order and repair, and, if any money was what it for the last twelve years.

The Soldiers' Home at Jackson is a place of opportunity for the greedy money lender to make gain at the cost of the poor borrower. As a rule the value of the property greatly exceeds the amount of the loan. The borrower, through adverse circumstances, being unable to meet the payments, the property is sold, and the borrower is left in the cold. In my judgment, there should be a law requiring a notice of foreclosures to be inserted in some obscure paper of the county, and, in the case of a mortgage for $100, the lender should take place himself in the office of the Secretary of State, and, in the case of twelve months thereafter he has obtained the money or money and property, the lender to pay the debt, he leaves for the first time his home, and, in the case of a mortgage for $100, he leaves for the first time his home

HEADQUARTERS OF THE NAT'L W. C. T. U.,
187 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.,
November 11th, 1886.

To all Working Men and Women—Brothers and Sisters of a Common Hope.—We come to you naturally as our friends and allies. With such of your methods as involve co-operation, arbitration and the ballot box, we are in hearty sympathy. Measures which involve the compulsion of labor, the destruction of property or harm to life or limb, we profoundly deplore, and we believe the thoughtful and responsible among our ranks must equally deplore them, as not only base in themselves, but a great hinderance to your own welfare and success. We rejoice in your broad platform of mutual help, which recognizes neither sex, race, or creed. Especially do we appreciate the sanacity of your great movement to elevate woman industrially to their rightful place, by claiming that they have equal pay for equal work; recognizing them as officers and members of your societies, and advocating the ballot in their hands as their rightful weapon or self-help in our representative government.

As temperance women, we have been especially glad to note your hostile attitude toward the saloon, the word for of women, and of the working men, and of the home. We read with joy of your vow made by the newly elected officers of the Knights of Labor at the convention in Richmond, Va., when, with hands raised to heaven, they pledged themselves to total abstinence.

In addressing you at this time we wish to offer our sincere congratulations upon your achievements as practical helpers in that great temperance reform which engages our steadfast work and prayers, and which, as we believe, involves, beyond all other movements of this age, your happiness and elevation. Permit us to ask your careful consideration of this statement of our belief.

The central question of labor reform is not so much how to get higher wages as how to turn present wages to better account. For waste harms most those who can least afford it. It is not over-production so much as under-consumption, that grinds the faces of the working men. Fourteen hundred millions annually drawn, chiefly from the pockets of the workmen, by saloon-keepers and cigar dealers, means less flour in the barrel, less coal in the cellar, and less clothing for the laborers' families. We grieve to see them give their money for that which is not bread, and their labor for that which satisfieth not. We suggest that if, by your request, pay day was universally changed from Saturday to Monday, this would do much to increase the capital at home.

The life insurance statistics prove that while the average life of the moderate drinker is but thirty-five years and a half, that of the total abstainer is sixty-four years. The successful explorers and soldiers, the famous athletes, pedestrians, rowers and shots are men who do not coil with their brains, or palsy their nerves with alcoholic drink.

We believe that the work of our societies, resulting in laws by which nearly one-half the children of the United States are being taught in the public schools the evil effects of intoxicating liquors upon the faculties of the body and the temper of the mind, merits your earnest co-operation, and will prove one of your strongest re-inforcements in the effort to elevate your families to nobler levels of opportunity. We believe that the society of hygienic, including a knowledge of the most healthful foods and the discovery that these are of like cheaper and non-stimulating class, with a careful consideration of the scientific methods by which in the preparation of food, a little can be made to go a long way in home economies, are well worthy of your attention. We ask you to aid us in our endeavors to have taught in all departments of our public schools, those beneficient laws of health which relate to wholesome living in respect to diet, sleep, exercise and ventilation, so that this teaching shall be given to every child as one of the surest means to its truest happiness.

We ask your attention to our white cross pledge of equal chastity for man and women; of pure language and a pure life. We ask your help in our efforts to secure adequate protection by law for the daughters of the poor and rich alike, from the cruelty of base and brutal men. We ask your help in our endeavors to preserve the American Sabbath with its rest and quiet, redeeming it from being as now the harvest time of the saloon keeper, when he gathers in the hard earnings of the working man, and we promise you our co-operation in your efforts to secure the Saturday half-holiday, which, we believe, will do so much to change the Sabbath from a day of recreation to one of rest at home and of the worship of God. We rejoice to note that the Central Labor Union of New York City petitioned its municipal officers to close the saloons upon the Sabbath day, and we earnestly hope that all such societies may soon petition for their closing every day, and order a perpetual boycott upon the dealers in alcoholic poison.

We call your attention to our departments of evangelistic temperance meetings; work for railroad employes, lumbermen, herdsmen, miners, soldiers and sailors; also to our efforts to organize free kitchen and kinder-gartens, and bands of hope; to supply free libraries and reading rooms, temperance lodging houses and restaurants, and to reach out a helping hand to fallen women as well as fallen men. We have a publishing house at 161 La Salle street, Chicago, which sent out thirty million pages of temperance literature in the last year, and which is conducted by women, and its types set by women compositors. Our national organ, The Union Signal, has good words for all lawful efforts made by working men and women for their own best interests.

We ask you to do all in your power for the cause of prohibition, which is pre-eminently your cause. With the drum-shop and its fiendish temptations overthrown, what might you not attain of that self mastery which is the first condition of success; and what might you not achieve of protection and happiness in those homes which are the heart's true rest on the places! Your ballots hold the balance of power in this land of our world's hope. We ask those of you who are voters to cast them only for such measures and such men as are solemnly committed to the prohibition of every brewery, distillery and dram shop in the nation. And both women may come to the rescue in this great emergency, also as an act of justice toward those who have the most sacred claim on your protection we hope that you may see your to vary clear to cast your ballots only for such measures and such men as are pledged to the enfranchisement of women.

In all this, we speak to you as those who fervently believe that the coming of Christ's kingdom in the earth means brotherhood. We urge you with sisterly earnestness and affection to make the New Testament your text book of political economy, and to join us in the daily study of its blessed words, who spake as never man spake. His pierced hand is lifting up this sorrowful, benighted world into the light of God. In earnest sympathy let us go forward to work out His golden precepts into the world's life and law by making first of all His law and life our own.

Yours for God and home and every land.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little startlement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of modern man and womanhood might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and restored, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, nervousness and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature that a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Parry Wood and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, in ted, three bottles of Electric Bitters and entirely healed the sore. Without question my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters is sold at 50 cts. a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Good Results in Every Case.

Mr. A. Bradford, wholesale paper dealer of Chattanooga, Tenn., writes: he was very seriously affected with a severe cold that settled on his lungs; had tried many remedies without benefit. Being induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, did so and was entirely cured by use of a few bottles. Since which time he has used it in his family for all coughs and colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands whose lives have been saved by this wonderful discovery. Trial bottles free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

A SWINDLER

does not refer possible purchasers to his victims. The Athlophoros Co. gladly refers sufferers from rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, nervous or sick headache, kidney and liver complaints to those who have been cured of these diseases by Athlophoros, and will furnish names and addresses of many persons in your locality. Athlophoros is the only remedy for these diseases that can stand such a test.

Lancaster, Wis.

I have suffered more or less with rheumatism, also dyspepsia, for years. For the past year the trouble has constantly increased so that for a month I could not dress myself, could not get up from my bed without help. For four days head to my feet every cord and muscle was stiff and sore. During this time I used various remedies all to no purpose, and continued to grow worse. My attention being called to Athlophoros I procured a bottle. Within five doses then slept easily till eight o'clock A. M. I got up and dressed myself and walked out without a cane. I was astonished at the result, could hardly believe that it had produced such an effect. I am getting to be an old man (72). I don't suppose I will make me a young man, but will use the lamp of life to burn down safely.

SAMUEL DAMON.

Monitor, Wis.

I have derived more benefit from Athlophoros than any other remedy I have ever taken. I have been troubled with inflammatory rheumatism for the past ten years, at times I was helpless, have tried all the medicine I could hear of to find no cure, until I got a bottle of Athlophoros. After taking one-half of it I was—not been bothered since. GEO. GALLOWAY.

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, but where they cannot be bought of the druggist the Athlophoros Co., 112 William St., New York, will send either (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 50c. for Pills.

For liver and kidney diseases, dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness, nervous debility, diseases of the urinary organs, including gravel, Dropsy, Wood, Etc., Athlophoros Pills are unequaled.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The undersigned having been restored to health by simple means after suffering for several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure. To those who desire it, he will cheerfully send (free of charge) a copy of the prescription used, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis and all throat and lung Maladies. He hopes all suffers will try his remedy, as it is invaluable. Those desiring the prescription, which will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing, will please address, REV. EDWARD A. WILSON, Williamsburg, Kings County, New York.

PIMPLES I will mail (sealed) to all a recipe for a simple VEGETABLE BALM that will clear the face of PIMPLES, FLESHWORMS, BLOTCHES, BLACK HEADS, Rednessing the skin and leaving it soft and beautiful. Address, Mrs. ADELAIDE DAVIS, Box 1, Bedford, Mass.

January thaw last week

It rained last Thursday afternoon and night.

There was a show at Schoffen's hall at Ironton last Thursday evening.

There was an oyster supper at the Hillegas school house last Thursday evening. Good time.

If any one wishes a good local paper, we would advise them to subscribe for the JOURNAL.

Mr. and Mrs. William Bishop, of Ironton, also lost a little child on Tuesday, 18th inst, aged ten months. It was buried on Wednesday.

The recent snow storm drifted the roads so badly in many places that they were almost impassable; the rain settled it some, but we have since had enough to make up the amount melted

J. H. Purvis, of Ironton, lost a little child last Saturday afternoon, aged about two years. It was buried Monday afternoon at the M. E. church, at one o'clock, Rev. J. T. Iddings officiating. Mr. McTavish interred at Bird's. The bereaved family have the united sympathy of all. The cause of its death was a hurt by a fall some time ago.

John Smith informs us that he has purchased a farm of twenty acres of land of D. N. Gregory, (the north half of the East half,) consideration $300, and intends to make a farm of it. He intends to build on it early in the next spring. Good luck for John.

Among our prosperous farmers, is Amond J. Lewis, who resides on his farm about two miles from Advance. Amond is an enterprising man; he has 160 acres of land, (something over 80 acres cleared, and under a good state of cultivation, fine well fenced, and nearly clear from stumps. He has about five acres of good bearing orchard, which is what every farmer ought to have. He raises from forty to fifty tons of hay yearly, as well as large quantities of grain. Amond began life as a lumberman with his father, Milo Bears (now deceased) when quite a small boy, at Northport, but after a few years he went into the business on his own hook, fishing at Northport, Charlevoix, the Beavers and many other points, and was also a captain on the lakes for some years, but he coming tired of this kind of life he came to the Pine Lake region and settled on the farm upon which he still resides. Some years after he took up his farm he accepted a position as clerk for Mr Lester at Charlevoix, but after the death of Mr. Lester he returned to his farm. Amond has been a resident of this township about eighteen years. He is a hard worker in the summer time but in the winter he sits by the blazing fire roasting his shins, smokes his pipe, reads four or five newspapers (the JOURNAL included) and listens to the howling of the wind and the performance of the snow storm and thus lives a happy life. Others could profit by his example.

Monday morning there was published a regular northern Michigan January thaw.

Ed Bartlett, of Charlevoix, visited some of his old friends and neighbors in Hayes last week.

Rev. J. K. Crane, of Horton's Bay, is visiting his friends and parishioners in Hayes, this week.

Moses Cooper has purchased a nice two-horse sleigh and robes, with which he will do his visiting after this.

Lots of snow and a heap of blow, and the effects of the combination are that the roads are pretty well blockaded.

A protracted meeting was held in District No. 6, last week. We did not learn with what success. It was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Wood.

Three more weeks school in Maple Grove District will finish up Mr. Goodrich's successful term, unless they conclude to hire him longer.

Prospects are fine for a January thaw. At present it would be a good thing for all engaged in the log business, as the snow is pretty deep in the woods.

It was quite stormy in the early part of last Sunday, but Moses Cooper was out with his "sporting rig."

Adelaid Lewis, who is teaching school in the Ava Smith District, was home on a visit a week ago last Sunday.

Sam Clark, who has been living in the Lewis boys' house, moved with his family, down to Mr. Struthers', last week.

Mrs. Chas. Howe, of Charlevoix, who was visiting at Mr. Chauncey Howe's last week, returned to Charlevoix on Saturday.

Would like to say to our brother or sister scribler of Eveline, that they had better not think at all than to think evil, and would refer them to a certain passage of scripture, "Judge not that ye be not judged."

Last week was a sick week for horse teams in some localities. One of Dr. Lewis' that he is keeping on his place here, was sick, and one of Mr. Chauncey Howe, Sr's, and one of Mr. Whitford's got hurt while in a stable.

Intermediate river is not frozen over yet.

We understand that Date Parks has bought George Cooper's homestead of 80 acres, in South Arm township.

No mail between Atwood and South Arm, since the 15th inst. We understand from the mail carrier that the Atwood postmaster forgot to give him the mail, because he did not make the trip in the required time, which he says he could not do on account of the roads. However, we hope our our mail service will soon be received.

STUDY AND WORKSHOP.

Insect-proof linings for trunks, closets, etc., as a protection from moths or other insects, is made by steeping any suitable fabric in a solution of tobacco and cascarilla bark macerated in benzine, then drying and sleeping in tobacco, cascarilla bark, and hot water.

It is estimated that the overall machinery of Great Britain now operated by steam power is capable of performing, more work, and hence producing more products, than could be effected by the labor of 600,000,000 able-bodied men, a greater number than all the workingmen on earth.

At a recent meeting of the Royal Microscopical society, London, Prof. Bell, at the request of the president, gave an account of what he regarded as the most extraordinary biological fact brought to light during the last twenty-five years—the existence of a third eye at the top of the head of certain lizards.

Prof. J. H. Long of the Illinois State Microscopical society, after repeated experiments, says: "Taking all things into consideration, I am forced to believe that we have to absolutely certain method of distinguishing between human and some of its substitutes, and that, of all methods proposed, the microscopic are, perhaps, the least reliable."

It may seem strange to the non-professional, that, in spite of persistent and skillful attempts to

EASTERN.

The Boston Chamber of Commerce adopted resolutions objecting to the "long and short haul" clause of the Cullom bill, and the Philadelphia Commercial Exchange indorsed it.

John M. Wilson was hanged at Norristown, Pa., for the murder of Anthony W. Dealy. Wilson gave himself up in Chicago while delirious with drink.

The District Attorney of Boston has filed a bill of complaint by the Government against the American Bell Telephone Company. It is essentially the same as that dismissed at Columbus for lack of jurisdiction.

An expedition under Professor Chas. A. Young is to search from Princeton College to Dakota to observe the eclipse next August.

Cocaine has nearly brought to the grave Dr. C. N. Moore, of Springfield, Pa., who for weeks has been suffering from hallucinations.

Archbishop Corrigan has appointed the Rev. Joseph Donnelly as the successor of Father McGlynn in New York. The appointee has been pastor of St. Michael's Church for thirty years.

The action of H. E. Jacobs, who recently bought the lease of the Third Avenue Theatre in New York of J. M. Hill, in relenting his prices to 50 cents for the best chair in the house, and from that down to a dime for a seat in the gallery, with a maximum charge of 20 cents for matinees, has raised a storm in theatrical circles. The managers of seven of the other combination theatres have combined to boycott the company who play at the Third Avenue under the new schedule.

Cholera is prevailing on the upper River Nile, in South Africa, and reports indicate that hundreds are dying every day.

John L. Sullivan has set about writing a book, the object of which is to get even with the newspapers which have exposed his drunken brutality from time to time.

Arthur J. McQuade, one of the hoodle aldermen of New York, has been taken to Sing Sing prison, to serve seven years.

WESTERN.

Chicago was selected by the Farmers' National Convention as the next place of meeting, on Tuesday before the meeting of the Fat Stock Show, November, 1887.

The Live-stock Commissioners of Illinois have made a scorching reply to the recent attack of N. J. Colman, the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The Germans of Chicago are having "The Mikado" in the tongue of the fatherland. McVicker's fine theater is to be occupied next week by Incmann & Schwig's Company, when a German version of Gilbert and Sullivan's opera will be sung by a cast of considerable strength. The translation is by a young German of Chicago, who is said to have accomplished his work with much felicity.

The Terre Haute Distillery, Terre Haute, Ind., was destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $100,000.

Major G. W. Cole, the revivalist, has within a week made three hundred converts at Salina, Kas.

Prof. Foster, of Iowa, predicts very warm weather the coming summer, and advises low-landers to lay in large supplies.

Meyer Kaufman, a commission merchant in St. Louis, is about to request the United States to demand $30,000 from the Spanish Government for his illegal arrest and detention in Cuba.

A hill near Chippewa Falls, Wis., has been found to contain gold, under, and a rich hematite—the value of the whole being placed at a fabulous sum.

In the United States Court at Detroit, last week, the common-stock holders of the Flint and Pere Marquette Railroad brought against them over $3,000,000 of alleged fraud and mismanagement, asking an investigation of the books, an injunction against the extension of the road pending the investigation, and the issuance of stock to the common-stock holders. It is claimed that the reorganization of 1880 was illegal, and that since that time the road has been run in the interest of holders of preferred stock. The suit involves $5,500,000, the amount of common stock.

SOUTHERN.

The mountaineers of Wayne County, Ky., gathered in small numbers at Monticello to witness the execution of William Pruitt, the murderer of Jarvis Buck and wife.

By the legal strangulation at Richmond, Va., of Thomas J. Cauvoins for the murder of his cousin, Fanny Lillian Madison, the last chapter was ended of a most sensational crime. The crime was committed to cover up Cauvoins' criminal relations with Miss Madison, who was a relative of President Madison, and the conviction was largely on circumstantial evidence.

Albert O'Dell, James Lamb, John F. Tetoe and John Stephens were hanged at Fort Smith, Ark., for murders committed in the Indian territory. The execution passed off quietly. O'Dell and Lamb killed Edward Foland in December, 1885, and at their trial each tried to convict the other. Tetoe was a desperado who had killed and robbed several persons. Stephens was an ignorant negro. Since sentence was pronounced he had claimed to have talked with visitants from the other world, who asserted him that his name was written in the "Book of Life."

A Dutch syndicate of bankers at Amsterdam have purchased 9,00 square miles of timber lands in Florida.

Abner Letcher, of Point Pleasant, W. Va., a lad of 15 years, has carried out his threat to avenge the murder of his father by Jason Borden. The corpse of the latter was found in the woods where the boy was hunting.

A freight train reaching Paducah, Ky., carried a burning car of cotton, in which were found the charred corpses of four tramps.

WASHINGTON.

The Department of Agriculture estimates of area, product, and value of corn, wheat, and oats for permanent record are completed, says a Washington dispatch:

The corn crop, in round numbers, aggregates 1,902,000,000 bushels, grown on 75,000,000 acres, yielding at an average of 25.3 bushels, the yield in 31 months per acre exceeding bushels less than last year. The average yield per acre is 2.3 per cent. and a decrease in product of 14 per cent., while the average price has increased 12 per cent., or from 42.8 cents per bushel to 48 cents per bushel. The aggregate product of wheat is 501,000,000 bushels from an area of nearly 37,000,000 acres, having a farm value of $184,000,000. The average value is 36.7 cents per bushel, against 75.1 for the previous crop, and 84.5 cents for the great crop of 1880, a fall of 51 per cent. reducing from the average of the years 1880, 1881, and 1882. The yield of the spring-wheat crop, in this estimate, was expected early in the season, and on the Pacific coast much worse. The gross oat product is 638,000,000 bushels, against 1,000,000,000 bushels last year. The product of oats is 624,000,000 bushels, from an area of over 27,000,000 acres, producing a value of $268,000,000. The average yield is 26.1 bushels, against 27.6 last year. The average value is 27.5 cents per bushel; last year, 28.3 cents per bushel.

It is conceded in Washington that the Pump-Pneumonia bill will pass the house when it again comes up.

Commissioner Sparks of the General Land Office has approved the report of Surveyor General Julian, of New Mexico, recommending the rejection of the Gasque Grix private land claim, covering an area of about seventeen thousand acres.

An adverse report has again been made to the United States Senate on the nomination of J. C. Matthews, of Albany, N. Y., the colored Register of Deeds of the District of Columbia.

Mrs. General Logan will make Washington her permanent home. The publishers of General Logan's book report that up to the date of his death, they had paid him an average of $1,000 per month, and the sales have since increased to a marvelous degree.

Haisall's painting of the battle between the Monitor and Merrimac has been hung in the east lobby of the Senate wing of the Capitol at Washington. The Library Committee paid $3,000 for it, although the artist had been offered $15,000 by parties desiring to exhibit it through the country.

General W. H. Hazen, Chief Signal Officer of the United States army, died in Washington last week. He had been ill but three days, and his death was unexpected.

Some Treasury officials consulted President Cleveland as to the advisability of calling an extra session, but after a lengthened conference he left them entirely in the dark as to his intentions.

Representatives of the third and fourth class post-offices are again seeking legislation to increase their compensation.

It is probable that the death of Gen. Hazen means the breaking up of the military department of the Missouri, and that the bureau will probably be turned over to the Interior Department.

The indebtedness on the Logan property in Washington has been paid off, and the children and heirs of Gen. Logan have conveyed all their rights to Mrs. Logan, so that the home is her sole property.

Charles Francis Adams, in a letter to the House Committee on Pacific Roads, states that the Union Pacific Company will do nothing to prevent an investigation of its affairs, but objects to the delay which keeps its securities bonded to and fro between Wall street and Washington.

POLITICAL.

The Republican majority in the Indiana House of Representatives was lady not inst, unseated Cornelius Meagher, a Democratic Representative from Vigo County. Meagher is a woman, and an active member of the Knights of Labor, by whom he was presented as a candidate for the Assembly and subsequently indorsed by the Democrats. The unseating of Meagher broke the Democratic majority of two on joint ballot, and the Republicans now have a majority in both houses. Senators and Representatives were proceeded to hold a caucus for the nomination of a candidate for United States Senator. The caucus lasted but a few minutes, the only name proposed being that of Harrison, who was nominated by acclamation.

Cleveland and his civil-service policy were condemned by the Democratic Legislature of Indiana at their annual State meeting at Indianapolis last week. W. Scott Bay, in an address on "How Best to Succeed in 1888," declared that Cleveland's nomination for re-election would be dangerous to the party interests. "The greatest enemy this Government ever had," said Mr. Bay, "and the Democracy's most formidable foe is the spurious dogma of civil-service reform. By its false and deceptional practice the Democratic party is degraded and forced into the very jaws of disintegration by a few the very antithesis of a republican form of government and the suppression of class in necessary only with the existence of despotic monarchies." David B. Hill, of New York, was declared to be the party's most available candidate for President in 1888.

From a number of inter Jews published by a Washington paper with Western and Southern memoers on the various tariff propositions it is apparent that Randall can undoubtedly win many Southern Democrats from Morrison, but it is claimed that the Western Republicans are soulliying against the scheme, and will go in for no tariff reduction that proposes to leave lumber, the iron and steel, and the textile schedules untouched while the tax is lifted from whisky and tobacco.

The Dominion Parliament has been dissolved and new elections ordered.

In the Circuit Court at Indianapolis, on the 17th inst., Judge Ayres rendered a decision against the claim of Solomon to the Lieutenant Governorship, and granted an injunction restraining him from presiding at the joint convention of the Legislature. Judge Ayres suggested that an appeal be taken at once to the Supreme Court.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

Two factions of longshoremen engaged in a riot in New Orleans, four persons being wounded by shots and one by a knife thrust. One of the victims is not expected to live.

The International Union of Brickla yers, at their convention in Washington, decided that they would continue to work nine hours a day, as in the past, and that they would not confuse with the Knights of Labor, as requested.

A proposed reduction of wages caused a strike of 2,500 hands in P. Lorillard's tobacco factory at Jersey City.

The International Union of Bricklayers and Masons, who have been holding a convention in Washington, D. C., adopted resolutions stating distinctly that the organization did not affiliate with socialists, anarchists, communists, or other societies opposed to sustaining the laws of our Government.

RAILROAD INTELLIGENCE.

The continuous wrangle with southern railway lines over the freight on pig iron to Chicago has made the pool roads decide to establish arbitrary rates from the Ohio river.

Citizens of Illinois, Kentucky, and Texas have secured at Springfield a license to incorporate the Chicago, Paducah and New Orleans Railroad Company, with a capital stock of $10,000,000. They propose to lay track from Lake Michigan to the Gulf.

A Boston syndicate has taken $11,000,000 in 4 per cent. bonds of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road at 90¼. They are a first mortgage on 900 miles of new track.

A monument to soldiers who fell in the war for the Union is about to be placed in the public square at Burlington, Wisconsin.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature of Texas requiring railroads to give thirty days notice of the discharge of employes or reduction of their wages, and also requiring laborers to give a month's notice of a strike.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The international curling match played at Toronto, resulted in a victory for the Canadians by 781 to 5 9.

Resolutions of respect to the memory of Gladstone were accepted by the executive committee of the Irish National Leagues of America, in session at Cincinnati. The nationalist "plan of campaign" was approved, and English tyranny in Ireland denounced.

The National Farmers' Congress, in session at Washington, adopted resolutions urging the passage by Congress of the following bills: To make the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer; to extend the benefits of the Signal Service to farmers; to regulate interstate commerce, and the Hatch experiment station bill. The resolutions also urge the enactment of legislation providing that a complete development of the system of waterways of the whole country; that the American mission in France and Germany be instructed to use all proper means to prevent the placing of restrictions upon American farm products properly inspected and shipped. A resolution recommending an appropriation of $5,000,000 to be used for the purpose of stamping out contagious diseases was reconsidered and unanimously rejected.

New York socialists are raising money to be used in the approaching elections in Germany for members of the Reichstag.

John Hayes, a St. Louis murderer, sentenced to hang March in 1885, took his case to the Federal Supreme Court on a writ of error, but the original judgment was affirmed.

FOREIGN.

Russia will raise $30,000,000 for expenditures by means of a loan.

The tenants on the Clanricarde estates at Loughrea, Ireland, have resolved to offer no resistance to bailiffs, on which plan they have the sympathy of all outside credit men.

In the German Parliament the army bill was amended by limiting its duration to three years, instead of the seven demanded by the Government, by a vote of 186 to 144. Prince Bismarck immediately read an imperial message dissolving the Reichstag, and a decree was each issued for general elections on Feb. 21.

The police of Berlin have forbidden the sale of a pamphlet issued by a socialist society in Chicago, containing extracts from the anarchists' trial.

During a dense fog the Dublin steamboat Banshee, with three hundred passengers on board, ran on the rocks at Holyhead yesterday. Eleven persons in the crew, it was stranded, but the Banshee floated off within three hours.

Pending Lord Randolph Churchill's explanation to his constituents, which is anxiously looked forward to, of his action in withdrawing from the Cabinet at so critical a moment as the present, a general public opinion seems to be that he resigned because the Chancellor of the Exchequer is a fit of pettiness brought on by a series of errors which revealed to him the fact that the Cabinet were not prepared to allow him to have entirely his own way in all matters, great and small.

Heavy snow-storms have prevailed all over Scotland.

In County Kerry, Ireland, a tenant farmer named Chase was shot and severely wounded for having paid his rent.

Emperor William, on his birthday, received from the Prince of the Prussian Landtag, expressing his chagrin at the defeat of the army bill, and voiced the hope that the measure would be passed in the near future.

Henry M. Stanley says the expedition for the relief of Emin Bey will sail early in the following month. It takes the Cossacks some days to reach the Black Sea on the west and the Caucasus on the north.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

BILLS authorizing a settlement of the claim of Hiram Berdan for the use of improvements made by the government, and extending for a year the time for filing claims under the French Spoliation act, passed the Senate on the 12th inst. Mr. Mahone, from the committee on public buildings, reported bills for public buildings at Jefferson, Tex., and Hastings, Neb., and a joint resolution for the relief of Mr. Lowell, from the Committee on Coast Defenses, reported as an amendment to the House bill to encourage the manufacture of steel for the purpose of the construction of steel vessels for the protection of fortifications and other works of defense. Mr. Allison, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the sundry appropriation bill with amendments. The Senate then took up the Interstate Commerce Committee's bill for the Edmunds anti-polygamy bill.

SENATOR CAMERON introduced a bill in the Senate on the 13th inst. for the appointment of Commissioners to represent the Federal Government at the centennial celebration of the formation and promulgation of the Constitution to be held in Philadelphia. The Senate passed the bill for the relief of Mr. Lowell. Mr. Allison called up the Chinese and Hawaiian treaties for the outcome of the war. Mr. Edmunds, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported favorably a bill providing that the Supreme Court may review the decisions of the Court of Claims, and a joint resolution to the effect that the results of the Congo Conference should be accepted by the United States. The Senate then took up the Edmunds anti-polygamy bill, and after some discussion, action was postponed. A message was received from the House announcing the concurrence in the conference report of the internal revenue bill.

THE House bill for the relief of Elon H. Marsh, of Battle Creek, Mich., to validate a patent for improvements in steam-engine-starter, was passed by the Senate on the 17th inst. The House also passed Senate bills granting a public school lands $12,000,000, and the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation in Kansas, whose size Missouri exceeds by 100,000 acres, aggregating 88,000 acres. A resolution was adopted to the effect that the Senate Committee on Commerce be empowered to investigate the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to require information as to the nature of the business before the commission, and the number of cases disposed of and pending. The Senate also adopted a resolution to the effect that the Senate Committee on Commerce be empowered to investigate and report the identity of the Lord Mayor of London who, it is said, was recently under the City of London jurisdiction, and who is the supposed author of the Chicago and Western Rivers Canal, which was reported to have received a number of citizens from Sunday. Mr. McPherson presented the report of the joint committee of conference on the internal revenue bill, which was agreed to by a vote of 38 to 7. The House then took up the Senate bill providing for the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation in Kansas, and after a long discussion, the bill was passed by a vote of 42 to 12.

An effort to secure the consideration of the measure was defeated—yeas, 91; nays, 95. Following are the votes on the negative side of the question: Yeas—Messrs. Allison, Beck, Berry, Blackburn, Blair, Blanchard, Brown, Butler, Cameron, Cockrell, Coke, Colquitt, Conger, Davis, Dawes, Dolph, Dorsey, Edmunds, Evarts, Farwell, Fitzpatrick, Frye, George, Gibson, German, Gray, Hale, Harris, Harrison, Hoar, Ingalls, Jones, Kenna, Kernan, McMillan, Manderson, Mitchell, Morgan, Morrill, Pendleton, Pettigrew, Platt, Pugh, Ransom, Sabin, Sawyer, Spooner, Stockbridge, Sullivan, Swinburne, Thurman, Vest, Wadleigh, Whitthorne, Wilson, Wolcott—46. Nays—Messrs. Aldrich, Anthony, Baker, Barbour, Plumb, Platt, Sabin, Saulsbury, Sawyer, Sewell, Shelby, Spooner, Stockbridge, Taylor, Vest, Wadleigh, Whitthorne, Wilson, Wolcott—46. Nays—Messrs. THE Senate passed the bill to provide for the relief of Mrs. Lucy Arthur, widow of the late Chester A. Arthur, by a vote of 42 to 16. Mr. Edmunds presented the report of the joint committee of conference on the Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, recommending that the Government accept the terms of the Thurman act, and, after some discussion, action was postponed. A message was received from the House announcing the concurrence in the conference report of the internal revenue bill.

THE House bill for the relief of Elon H. Marsh, of Battle Creek, Mich., to validate a patent for improvements in steam-engine-starter, was passed by the Senate on the 17th inst. The House also passed Senate bills granting a public school lands $12,000,000, and the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation in Kansas, whose size Missouri exceeds by 100,000 acres, aggregating 88,000 acres. JOHN M. WILSON HANGED.

A Crime Which Nearly Led to the Hanging of Another Man for Murder.

The Singular Circumstances Connected with Wilson's Arrest and Conviction.

[Norristown (Pa.) special.]

John M. Wilson was hanged in the jail-yard here, on Thursday, for the murder of Anthony W. Dealy, in Dealy, in February, 1885, in Montgomery County, near the Philadelphia city line. Wilson read a speech from the scaffold. He confessed his guilt, and said his death in expiation of the crime should be a warning to all persons who had become victims to strong drink. His body was cut and dried and handed over to a physician to whom he had willed it.

The history of the crime for which John M. Wilson paid the extreme penalty, and the manner of his conviction, are probably without parallel in the annals of criminal history. But for a confession, which the murderer afterward denied, the death of Anthony Dealy would never have been accounted for, and probably another and an innocent man, who was actually hanged for another crime which is most curiously interwoven with Dealy's fate, would have suffered not.

In October, 1885, Frederick Stahl, a butcher who worked for Albert Dieterle at No. 505 Market, Philadelphia, left his home one morning with a satchel and suddenly dropped out of sight. He had lived with Adolph Schoninger, a fellow-lodger, at No. 207 Vine street, with whom he had deposited $700 for safe-keeping. Weeks passed, and Stahl was not heard from. Schoninger said that Stahl had been murdered, and accused Albert Dieterle (who used Stahl money) of the crime. In the following March the bones and dismembered trunk of a human being was found floating in the Wissahickon Creek, in Fairmount Park. A further search was made, and one leg and one arm were found. Schoninger's charge that Dieterle had murdered his employe was renewed, and when at the inquest the body was identified as that of Stahl, Dieterle was arrested.

On Sunday, Oct. 4, 1885, a peculiar-looking man walked into the West Twelfth Street Station in Chicago, and said that he was a murderer. He said he had killed a man named Anthony Dealy near Philadelphia in January, and after sawing the body in sacks had thrown it in the Wissahickon Creek. The next day he repeated the same story, but in more detail. He said he had been employed by one Anthony Dealy for several months on a farm near Philadelphia. He quarreled with Dealy about $30 which was due him, and then, picking up a heavy stone, struck the man on the head, killing him instantly. He then cut off the victim's head and hid it between two feather-beds. The next day, while the men were away on the farm, he cut off the legs and arms, and then put the body into a feed-box. The trunk he went to the creek and selected a place in which to bury the remains. He then drew the cut out the head in a bag along with a lot of stone, the body and limbs were placed in other sacks, and, with the aid of a sleigh and horses, he drove to the creek and left the place selected and threw it overboard. He then went to Philadelphia, and, after spending his money for drink, returned to the farm and found that the body had not yet been discovered, and he said Dealy's family supposed he was burned up in it.

The trial, which was begun March 8 last, lasted several days and was very sensational in its character. Stahl's brother, his friend, Schoninger, and others who knew Stahl well still swore that the body found in the river was that of the missing butcher. A score of others swore that it was that of Anthony Dealy. They related the burning of the house and the disappearance of Dealy's family. THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

At the regular weekly meeting, last Monday afternoon, of citizens interested in the D. C. & E. R. R. Co., the soliciting committee reported that the full amount of stock necessary for organization was taken. The officers will be elected and papers filed in a few days, and then the work of locating the line and securing right of way will be pushed as fast as possible. The company mean business, but they need the assistance of every man along the line, over whose land the road must pass.

Petoskey's Idea of a Railroad to Charlevoix.

The items going the rounds of the state press about the proposed railroad from Charlevoix to Grayling has called out an expression from Petoskey that Charlevoix people will do well to heed. For a number of years it has been understood that Petoskey people were doing all they could to prevent strangers from coming to Charlevoix; but of course it is always denied when anyone is asked about it. Last week, however, both papers gave expression to the idea so thoroughly settled in every Petoskey soul, that Charlevoix is "a pokey old place, with no energy," a "thitherto sleepy old town," etc. Now will the citizens continue to deny that they are doing all in their power to injure Charlevoix, and prevent our getting any advantages in the way of better transportation, more business and more resident population? We give below the item, with the comments by the Democrat. We trust Charlevoix business men will keep this in mind, and by their energies push the proposed road to completion, in spite of Petoskey's objection:

"The business men of Charlevoix held a railroad meeting recently to discuss the feasibility of a road from Charlevoix, via. Ironton and East Jordan, to some point southeast on the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad, or the Michigan Central. Committees were appointed to solicit funds for the survey. They have been successful in receiving ready cash, and a surveying party is out making preliminary examination of the country between Charlevoix and Mancelona.—State news item.

Some three weeks ago the Democrat called the attention of our business men to the fact that a strong effort was being made by the business men of Charlevoix and Mancelona to procure a branch of the Central from Crawford, running direct from the latter place through Mancelona to Charlevoix. People were inclined to scoff at our timely warning—and we had a dream—ate too heavy a supper and had the nightmare, etc. Petoskey in the meantime has remained quiet as the grave in regard to the matter. How has it been at Charlevoix? A business men's meeting has been called, a railroad committee has been appointed, also a committee to solicit funds for a survey of the route, the money has been raised and a party is now surveying the proposed line and estimating the cost of the road between Charlevoix and Mancelona. What has Petoskey done in the meantime? Nothing, absolutely nothing. And still we continued to look upon Charlevoix as a pokey old place with no energy; but a greater mistake never was made. Now will any sensible man in Petoskey answer this question: If Charlevoix and Mancelona succeed in securing this contemplated branch from the Central, what effect will it have upon our prospects of securing a branch from the same road? Our personal opinion is that it would completely shut off all prospects of Petoskey ever getting a branch from the Central, and we have valid reasons for so believing. Now, why not call a meeting, discuss the subject in a calm and friendly manner, and see if it is not possible to accomplish something in the line of securing the door before the horse is stolen. A free and friendly interchange of ideas upon matters pertaining to Petoskey's welfare, certainly can injure no one, but may result in incalculable good to all."

The following items from the Petoskey Record, shows Hon. Rostevon's extraordinary love for his Charlevoix neighbors:

"The Charlevoix folks are all alive on the subject of a branch road from the Michigan Central, and Brother Smith whenever he now refers to Petoskey closes his left eye, and bulges out his right cheek with his tongue. All right! gentlemen. You ought to have a railroad outlet and we hope you will get one; but we don't believe you will get the Michigan Central. Probably you will get the G. R. & I. and is due time the Chicago & West Michigan.

"Charlevoix, Ironton, and East Jordan people have dropped into county seat squabble and are now organizing a joint movement to secure a railroad. Ostensibly it is to secure a branch of the Michigan Central. Probably, however, they expect that the G. R. & I. will hump itself to "get there" under the pressure of this movement.

"The Michigan Central is going to build a branch from Wolverine to Petoskey next summer, and unless the Charlevoix Sentinel is more polite we will have it stop here instead of going on to Charlevoix. The Chicago and West Michigan are coming to make their terminus at Petoskey, though incidentally they will put in a side track at Charlevoix.

"We are not at all alarmed by the tremendous railroad excitement over at Charlevoix, but the fact that that hitherto sleepy old town is getting ahead of Petoskey in the matter of a toboggan slide cuts us to the quick."

Stockbridge's Reception.

This is the way the Lansing Republican tells it:

"Come in! Glad to see you. Walk right in."

The hour was long after midnight and the red-breasted cock out in the chicken-coop was clearing his throat preparatory to ushering in the binshing day god—or words to that effect. But we were not in the chicken-coop. We were just sliding through the doorway into the luxurious apartments of Col. Stockbridge, on the second floor of the Lansing House, at the aforesaid hour on Thursday night. The clear colonel was "receiving" his friends in honor of having just been chosen to represent the great state of Michigan in the United States senate. The reception was largely cocked up in mysterious black bottles and to all appearances the colonel's happiness was just as great as the rest of himself. He dispensed hospitality by the gallon and allowed every man to do his own measuring. Never in all his life had he had so many friends. They came trooping in from the highways and hedges and stepped up and took a long pull and a strong pull at one or more of the decanters. After they got through pulling, they almost without exception turned round and pulled again. By and by everybody in the room was a United States Senator. After a little more by and by, most of those who were being "received" could look in the big pier glass and see at least half a dozen United States Senators in the single reflection. When the cock got his throat clear and washed in the gladsome light of dawn, the Lansing House and vicinity was full of statesmen with a head as big as a Dutch barn. Such is fame.

Railroad Enthusiasm at Grayling.

GRAYLING, January 23.—A large and enthusiastic railroad meeting was held in the Opera House last evening. The newly proposed railroad is to extend from Charlevoix, on the western shore of Michigan, to Grayling, crossing the Grand Rapids & Indiana road at Mancelona. The survey have begun work at Charlevoix and our executive committee, composed of R. H. Anson, M. S. Hartwick, Hon. O. Pulmer, J. O. Hadley and Dr. Maurice Rich, will meet the officers and a like committee from Charlevoix at Mancelona on February 2, to complete the arrangements. There is now no doubt in regard to the road being built. By this arrangement passengers from the north-western portion of Michigan, after reaching Grayling, can leave for the south and east by four regular passenger trains which run between Grayling, Bay City, and East Saginaw. Arrangements are being made to secure the ear ends terminus of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad here, which within the next year will be built to within a few miles of here by the contractors, who are already at work.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us vanities of mountains, seas and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health, but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof, that Green's August Flower, will make them free from disease, as it has been. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such sufferings, with Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the Head, Palpitation of the Heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. 2 cow1

Saved His Life.

Mr. D. I. Whiteman, of Bear Cave, Ky., says he was, for many years, afflicted with phthisis, also diabetes; the pain were almost unendurable, and would sometimes almost throw him into convulsions. He tried Electric Bitters and got relief from first bottle and after taking six bottles was entirely cured, and had gained in flesh 18 pounds. Says he positively believes he would have died, had it not been for the relief afforded by Electric Bitters. Sold at 50 cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Broker Town Invalids.

Probably never in the history of cough medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Price's Special Cough Cure. Thousands of here-to-fore cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous remedy. It is for this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is prescribed and recommended by eminent physicians, and is taken with perfect safety by old and young. Its cleansing and vitalizing effects are sure and speedy, and it is universally conceded to be the most effective of all blood purifiers.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a scraping tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stoverall, M.D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases. —M. A. Bird, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—A. P. Henderson, Louisburgh, Iowa.

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a number of years comparatively vigorous. In case of exposure, I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchial Cough. The physicians attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Consumption. After trying various medicines, without relief, I finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured. —Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

At Hart, Oceana county, the "delinquent have decided (?) to boycott the Business Men's Association, and have found a man willing to put in a stock of goods and run opposition to the whole association. What a delightful time he will have by-and-by, when he tries to do some collecting.

After Col. Stockbridge's "reception" given by the Lansing Republican, we do not wonder that the house promptly passed the prohibitory amendment. The necessity for it was made plain, but, unfortunately for our senator, its provisions cannot be made to apply in Washington.—Eagle.

On Jan. 29th the Detroit Evening Journal will commence a new serial tale, by Sidney Luska, entitled "The Yoke of the Thorah." A good deal of literary vigor has been given to the Journal lately, and we have no doubt the coming serial will be fully up to the best efforts in the past.

The chances to become a charter member of the D. C. & E. R. R. Co. are not numerous, but the chances to contribute to the welfare of the enterprise by the giving of right of way will be good as long as there is a foot of way unsecured. Remember this, and prepare your mind to do some thing handsome when the committee calls.

There was a well attended temperance meeting held at the Congregational church Monday evening, in which a number of our citizens took active part. A pleasant time was had the principal features of which were addresses by Rev. W. G. Clark and Dr. Carlstein, a recitation by Miss Cody, and musical selections by Miss Kanagy, Mrs. E. M. Clark, Dr. Carlstein and Mr. F. A. Watson.

A new regulation has been made in regard to postal notes. Instead of being drawn on some stated office, they will now be drawn on "any money order office," and when so drawn are payable upon presentation at any money order postoffice in the United States. By this arrangement they may pass from one part of the country to another as many times as desired within three months after date of issue.

The lecture by W. H. McCartney at the M. E church Wednesday night was fairly well attended. Mr. McCartney spoke for an hour on the subject, "Pictures I have seen," discussing briefly a few historical and other pictures which he saw at the Centennial, bringing out in an interesting manner the advantages of a Christian education and civilization over the ignorance and superstition of people who do not believe in ovr modern Christian religion.

The proposed railroad from Manistee to Traverse City was chartered the past week under the name of the "Manistee & Northeastern Railroad," with a capital of $600,000. At next meeting of the common council permission will be asked to run the line through certain streets of the city and to build an iron bridge across the river at the foot of Jones street. The intention of the projectists is to give a contract for building the bridge, so that work can be commenced as soon as possible this spring.—Manistee Advocate.

The old furniture stock of H. C. Cooper has passed into the hands of S. M. See & Sons, (Charlie and Louie) and is now being removed preparatory to a good "sorting up" with new, for the spring trade. These gentlemen are too well known in Charlevoix county to need any send-off from the Journal, they are hustlers, and will run the furniture business for all there is in it. We understand that a hearse will be added to the outfit in the near future, as well as a large assortment of undertakers' goods. We have no doubt of the new firm's success.

Mrs. L. W. Skinner died at the residence of H. D. Wood in Charlevoix, last Friday morning, aged 45 years. Mrs. Skinner has been a resident of Charlevoix and vicinity about 20 years, and could count as friends her entire circle of acquaintances. Her husband, L. W. Skinner, it will be remembered, died in Virginia in September, 1883, where he was preparing a home for his family, and to which Mrs. Skinner was about to move, having her personal effects nearly ready for transportation when the news of his death was received. She leaves three children, viz: Mrs. Skinner, of Menominee, Mrs. E. S. Rawlers, of East Jordan, and Mrs. H. D. Wood, of Charlevoix. The funeral services were held at the Congregational church Saturday afternoon, and were largely attended.

A Railroad.

The talk to young people on "A Railroad," at the Congregational church, Tuesday evening, was not as well attended as deserved. The address, "Strange we never hear the music till the sweet voiced bird has flown," may very appropriately be applied by those who remained at home.

After an introductory reading on the effects of the "steam horse" in India, by Rev. A. T. Waterman, Mr. A D Cruickshank spoke for an hour on the above subject, giving many interesting features of the railroad system a thorough review in its historic and scientific progress. From the slow and tiresome foot, or and horse mode of conveyance and travel, to the lightning speed and wonderful burden, bearing power of the railroad are themes of interest and instruction. The first railroad on this continent was one 23 miles long, on a level plane, and without curves. The coaches were mere open wagons, and the locomotive an upright boiler on a car of four wheels. The speed was ten miles an hour. In the early stages of railroading, travelers were obliged to undergo the discomfitures of hunger, sleeplessness and various other inconveniences. To-day we have a railroad system which can traverse curvatures, ascend mountains, descend into mines, cross a Niagara, or a Lawrence, run sixty five miles an hour and "better," and on which the traveler may rest, eat and sleep with the same luxuriousness as that to be had in the best of American hotels; a railroad, upon which one may step at our extreme eastern shore at the Atlantic coast, and, without delay or inconvenience, be conveyed across the country to the extreme western boundary at the Pacific coast; a railroad system that is penetrating the most remote sections of the east, west, north and south, carrying civilization, opening up the resources, affording employment to the working class, absorbing resources of our country and bringing to market that which, without it, would lie dormant and unfruitful. These, and many more interesting facts concerning the railroad, were ably presented by Mr. Cruickshank. He also presented some fine stereoscopic views of railroad engineering, among which were views of the railroad used in ascending to Tip-top house, on Mt. Washington.

Those who can should attend these Tuesday evening talks. Don't imagine that because home talent is being utilized you may not interested or instructed. The subject for next Tuesday evening will be, "Two birds in the bush."

Historical Society.

Friday evening, Jan. 21, was a most enjoyable time to all who assembled at the home of President E. H. Green. The literary, musical, and social features of the evening were exceptionally good.

The literary part of the program consisted of "The Persian Invasion," treated by Miss Luna Washburn, also readings by Misses Phila Wood and May Waterbury.

Miss Sadie Miller and Mrs. Guyles furnished instrumental music, and Miss Cody, Misses Cassie Allen and Mabel Green, and Dr. Carlstein, vocal music.

Articles of association were adopted and the society will soon become incorporated.

The next meeting will occur on Friday evening, the 28th inst., at the home of W. P. Brown, when H. M. Enos will present a paper upon "Hannibal in Italy."

I. O. G. T.

At the meeting held in the parlors of the Bridge Street house, Saturday evening last, to consider the organizing of an I. O. G. T. lodge, about thirty were present. After discussion it was decided to meet at the same place every Saturday evening, this week, and organize under the old charter.

The Taste for Medical Humbug.

Though it speaks little for modern civilization, the masses of the people are wont to esteem the sage as a charlatan, naturally wise in the secrets of Nature, and especially in the prevention and extermination of disease, accrediting him with knowledge which, in pharmacal, and therapeutical, illat if possessed of such a shadow of reality would be little less than divine. In this be a very interesting evidence of man's tendency to credulity, and of lingering attributes of the final state of his awe in the presence of the occult, and inherent worship of the unknown; for how frequently one encounters, in all ranks and classes of society, individuals who, in spite of reiterated teachings and surroundings, exhibit an unmistakable tone for charlatanism in some of its many forms, secular and spiritual!

"Medicine" as exemplified among the savage races and tribes of America is practically one and the same with the "shamanism" of the European and Asiatic nomad, the "fetich" of the native African, and the "obi-rites" and "voodoo-worship" of the West India blacks and negroes of the Gulf States. A careful examination of all reveals not only a common origin, but a unity of purpose.

The "medicine" of the Indian is his religion and philosophy; and it comprises everything in life and Nature, real or imaginary, superstitious or occult; and withal it is a mystery so subtile in its many factors as to defy definite definition, or perfect elucidation.

The "medicine-man" is no more a physician, in the modern and enlightened acceptance of the term, than is he a man because it chances to assume the erect posture and mimic the attributes of the human race; there is a slight analogy, but nothing more. The savage knows absolutely nothing of the relationships existing between cause and effect, of the action of remedies as a remedy, of physiological conditions and phenomena, or indeed of any agency that is not directly born of the occult. He suppose the word and its circumambient other to be permeated by good, bad, and indifferent, who determine the fortunes of men and regulate the phenomena of Nature in accordance with individual will and fancies; and who bear some mysterious and indefinable relationship to each other, and to one "Great Spirit" or Supreme Power who figures under a variety of guises and titles, according to circumstances and surroundings.—Dr. G. A. Stockwell, in Popular Science

When the Bombs Were Flying.

Col. John R. Towers, principal keeper of the penitentiary, aided and abetted in one of the most cruel jokes of the war. The federals were leisurely firing shells into some confederate works, and the bombs were falling and bursting in such uncomfortable nearness that the soldiers had dug holes in the ground and were hiding as best they could. The colonel and some friends got hold of an unexploded shell and stuffed it full of fuse. When the next report was heard the fuse was touched off and after a moment the bomb was dropped into the mouth of one of the "gopher" holes where several soldiers were sheltered. "Zip-zip-zip-s-s-s-zip-zip-zip!" went the fuse for several minutes. Howl after howl went up as the soldiers expected to be blown to atoms. After a time the sputtering fuse burnt out and things quieted down.

When Col. Towers concluded his recital of the above story a private who was minus an arm remarked:

"One day a boat opened on us with canister, and the boys were sorter rattled, until a big fellow shouted: 'Stick to 'em boys; their ammunition's gin out and they're shootin' dinner-buckets at us!'"—Atlanta Constitution.

A Bostonian, seeking to be free and easy and to keep cool, thrust his collapsed cuffs into his coat pocket and spread the coat upon a bench that it might serve as a cushion. But in thus sitting he rubbed a match that happened to be in the same pocket against the cuffs, which took fire. When he got up he got up in a hurry. It was his best coat, and now he is without so much as a scrap of a best coat.

WE SHALL MEET IN THAT BEAUTIFUL LAND.

BY M. VICTOR STALEY.

Ere long we shall meet in that beautiful land
All those who have passed over the tide.
Shall meet and shall know them, to part never more,
Safe, secured at last by their side.
O, the thought of that meeting in bright realms above,
So grand it seems almost a dream!
There we shall be free from life's sorrows and woes,
And love shall reign ever supreme.

Chorus.

They are waiting for us on that ever green shore,
Are waiting to welcome us home;
Soon we shall join our loved ones we shall reach their rest
No more through life's darkness to roam.

Our bark is now plowing the rough sea of life,
Which forcely the waves and breakers roar;
The rocks of temptation, the whirlpool of sin,
Are all that we fear on life's shore.
Yet we will not despair, for now breaks on our sight
A light from that beautiful land,
A beacon to guide us safe over the tides—
Heaven's port is now almost at hand.

Soon the dark waves of life will dash o'er us no more,
Soon we shall behold that fair land
Soon we shall meet those we love on that land of bright
And quaff from its clear, sparkling rills.
Soon join the "Harbor of Refuge" we'll glide,
And our dangerous journey be over.
Our dear loved ones grew so with kindness and love,
As we look on that beautiful shore.

THE TRAMP'S SACRIFICE.

BY J. F. F.

Near sunset of an evening of the last July, Wellington Seymour stood by his front gate, wiping himself after a hard day's labor in the harvest-field, by watching the people who passed on the road. They all bowed or spoke to him; no man in the town was more highly respected or better known. He was its Superior, and a deacon of the church over the hill; he owned an hundred acres of valuable land, which he worked himself, and the pretty frame house just behind him. His wife was at this time sitting on the piazza, and their only child, Winnie, was racing up and down it, somewhat boisterous with the high spirits of childhood. The family and the help had eaten supper, and all were enjoying in their own way the beautiful summer hour between sunset and darkness.

Wellington Seymour was forty-six years old. His hands were hard with toil; for, though rich and prosperous, he was one of those who deem manual labor a divinely imposed duty. He was tanned and sun-burned with exposure; and the trials and duties of life, as well as its sorrows, had given a grave and thoughtful aspect to his face. At other times would have added ten years to his real age. The few people in such a rural neighborhood as this who were accustomed to study character by the features had seen that there was something more than gravity in Mr. Seymour's face. There was a restlessness about his eye. Sometimes he started upon hearing an unfamiliar voice. While the fact had not become a subject of remark, it had certainly been noticed by those few that Mr. Seymour did not often appear to be at ease.

As he continued to stand at his gate, a man passed by on foot who neither bowed nor spoke to him. He was a stranger, ragged, tattered and dusty garments. He walked slowly past, using a long staff, and apparently very much fatigued. His hair and beard were long and unkempt; his face bore the unmistakable marks of dissipation and excess. He was, in short, a tramp one of a class which Mr. Seymour hated—or would have hated had his Christian principle allowed such a feeling. He looked idolatry at the man, as he went by, merely observing that he was a tramp, without taking particular note of his face. It did not see that the man stared hard at him, or he had turned his eyes from the unpleasant object. The man walked a rod past the gate, and then suddenly wheeled and came back. He stood right in front of the farmer and leaned heavily on his staff.

"Sir," he said, "I am very tired and very hungry. Will you feed me, and lodge me to-night?"

"You look like a tramp," the farmer replied. "You know the penalties you are liable to suffer."

"Yes, I know," the wayfarer cried. His dark eyes snapped viciously, and there was a zing to his voice that startled Mr. Seymour. "I am an outcast, an Ishmaelite—not because I am vicious, but because I am vicious and poor. The law makes it an offense to be poor, if you are bad. Perhaps it is right; but I'm too much exhausted now even to talk about such refinements; opens to you as a man to help a fellow man in distress. Twenty-five miles have I walked to-day; nothing have I eaten since noon. I have been refused relief at half a dozen farm-houses, and whipped off from wagons where I tried to get a seat for my poor bruised feet. Well—are you heartless, too? Feed me!

"Those piercing black eyes were fixed on the farmer's face, with an expression that haunts him to this day. A very brief struggle in his breast ended by his throwing open the gate.

"Come in, poor fellow," he said. "I'll take care of you till to-morrow."

The tramp entered. A few words from the farmer to his wife explained the matter to her, and she went to the kitchen to provide something for the poor waif to eat. The man went to the pump, washed himself, brushed off the dust, and then went into the kitchen and sat down to the table. The meal that he ate may have its parallel among those of his kind; the Seymour household had certainly never witnessed such a consumption of provisions by one person. While he was eating, little Winnie came into the kitchen, and, with the confidence that is natural to some children, went up to him and laid her hand on his arm. He looked at her kindly.

"What is your name, little one?" he asked.

"Winifred. They call me Winnie, for short."

He wiped his mouth—and most unmannerly in this connection, but certainly true, there was a roar in his eye, which he dashed away with the back of his hand. Of what could he be thinking? Perhaps, of his own youthful days of innocence; perhaps, of words read long ago: "not lately forgotten—'for of such is the kingdom of heaven.'"

"Would you kiss me, Winnie?"

She looked up into his fierce, bearded face, and found a very tender expression in his eyes, and she kissed him without hesitation.

The mother's heart was also softened by this little episode; so, when the man had finished his meal, she said to him:

"I will make you up a bed on the floor, in the room above this.

"You are very kind, ma'am," he replied, "but, really, I don't think I could sleep in a made-up bed. So many years as I've slept in a hammock at sea, and on the ground under the trees in foreign lands, and in the fence-corners and in hay-lofts in my own country, have just about unfitted me for sleeping like a Christian, in a soft bed. Your husband can show me the way to the barn, and I'll warrant that I get a night's rest there."

Mrs. Seymour left him sitting there when she had removed the dishes and gone into the sitting-room. The servant girl and the two hired men looked into the kitchen, and, seeing who was in occupant, withdrew. The brief evening passed. Mr. Seymour, according to his usual custom, had offered up his evening family prayer, and he then sang a hymn, while his wife accompanied him on the organ.

"What is that?" he asked, when he had finished. Both listened, and heard the tramp in the kitchen singing a verse of the same hymn.

"He is a queer fellow," said the wife. "He refused my offer of a bed over the kitchen, and made you to show him the hay-mow. He said he had been a soldier, and could sleep in a bed. And to hear him singing that hymn after you!"

Mr. Seymour started at her words, and walked the floor. Turn-restlessness that he would go and show him his bed in the barn, he left the room. His wife was wearied with the household labors of a long summer day, and retired to bed. Before her husband returned she was sleeping soundly.

There was no sleep for Wellington Seymour on that long-remembered night. The face and the voice of the tramp effectually drove slumber from his pillow, wearied as he was. When he showed him to his nest in the barn he had asked his name, but the man shook his head.

"Name!" he said, "what should I want of a name? Names are for people who can boast them. I suppose I had one, once; but I have pretty near forgotten it."

The farmer walked the floor of the sitting-room for an hour, trying to compose himself, and to drive that face and that voice from his mind. The effort was useless, yet it had so added to his exhaustion that he joined he might sleep, and so he lay down on the lounge. In vain; he could not sleep. The clock struck twelve, and, after that, one; but Mr. Seymour still lay awake.

Exhausted in body and mind, he rose and went out into the open air. There was a brilliant harvest-moon in the heavens, and he saw from his gate a dark figure moving slowly down the hillside back of the house, and across the lots. He watched the movements of this figure, and was surprised to see it advancing straight toward his outbuildings. When the man was hidden from sight behind the barn, Mr. Seymour cautiously started out to intercept him. He plied his hand on the man's arm just as he was entering the barn-door. It was the tramp.

"What does this mean, sir?" he sternly demanded.

"Don't be alarmed," said the man. "I'm neither house-breaker nor barn-burner, I assure you. But—but, many years ago I used to know this neighborhood, and I haven't seen it for thirty years. I couldn't sleep a wink to-night, and started to rove round—for that's my disposition. I've been down over your farm, and the place is in. And I see you've a cemetery up there on the hill. It's year from end to end, I take it, and your two children that are buried in it?"

"Yes."

"Then you've seen sorrow as well as prosperity!"

"God knows I have!" Seymour answered, with a great sob. "My very heart-strings were torn by the loss of the three who fill those graves."

"Well, will; life is pretty much the same everywhere. Some have to suffer more for that matter, good-by. I shall be out of your way early in the morning, I suppose you are up."

Mr. Seymour's face showed great surprise, and not only surprise, but relief. He eyed the man sharply for a moment, and then thrust his hand into his pocket.

"Here is something for you," he said; "you are welcome to it."

He turned from the tramp. He walked until the farmer was out of sight, and then he went down to his orchard, to do what something like an oath broke from his lips. Presently he returned, carrying up the money, and put it in his pocket, and climbed into his bed in the barn-loft.

Mr. Seymour was still unable to sleep. A fiend delight he heard the clock of the gate-latch, and, peering through the blind of the open window, he saw the tramp standing outside. He stood there motionless for a long time, and appeared to be taking a survey of the place and the house. Then he turned and moved off down the road.

A look of intense relief came to the farmer's face.

"I was foolish to be so disturbed," he thought; "merely an exception that means blance." Then he lay down to sleep; and when the breakfast bell rang, an hour later, he was in a sound slumber.

Wellington Seymour awakened, at his usual, and very early, hour in harvesting, like one who has escaped from a threatening peril, and he was freely reliant on the fact of his escape. All that had happened to him since the tramp departed seemed like an unpleasant dream. The man in the field reminded that he was a whole hour late—something before unheard of—and that he did not feel as usual. At his order Dr. Heard's horse and buggy chained up the road and halted opposite the field where they were all at work. Mr. Seymour was surprised at the call to the road, with a premonition that he was sickness upon him. It was even so. The messenger told him that at Oakland, an hour before, a tramp had tried to catch a ride on a freight train; that he had fallen under the wheels, and was now dying, with both legs crushed; and when he had begged the doctor to send at once for Wellington Seymour, for he could not die without seeing him.

Mr. Seymour waited not an instant; not even to put on his coat, which he had left in the field. He took his seat in the buggy, and in thirty minutes the tired animal had brought him to the station. An excited crowd blocked the entrance to the freight house. Doctor Heard said several others came forward as Mr. Seymour alighted in the crowd.

"He can't live half an hour," said the doctor. "I sent for you, because he calls for you all the time, and he says he has a big right mind, too. Who do you think he is?"

"He is my brother," said Mr. Seymour.

"The crowd fell back as he advanced, and in a moment he and the doctor were alone with the dying man. The man was thrown over his mangled limbs. His fading eyes lighted as he saw Mr. Seymour by his side, and he held out his hand to him.

"You didn't know me last night, Wellington?" he said.

"No, Winfield—not surely; but I suspected. Why didn't you tell me who I speak out?"

"And make you miserable?—you, and your wife, and that dear child, whose face is so like our mother's! Is she not like her, Wellington?"

"She is indeed, lad."

"Wait; hear me. These are my last moments, brother; let me talk. Do you remember those old days, when father and mother and you and I were so happy there at the old homestead? Of course you do. You were ten years younger than I, and a little wild, because you were a boy, and father made his will, leaving everything to me, but charging me to be kind to you. And how things have changed! I became the wanderer, the sea-farer, and at last the tramp; you stayed at home, and when father died—which I did not hear for a year—there were two brothers left to share the old homestead. Of course you did. You were ten years younger than I, and a little wild, because you were a boy; and father made his will, leaving everything to me, but charging me to be kind to you. And how things have changed! I became the wanderer, the sea-farer, and at last the tramp; you stayed at home, and when father died—which I did not hear for a year—there were two brothers left to share the old homestead?

Lessons From the Census.

"In 1880 there were in the United States, in round numbers, 10,000,000 voters. Of this number, 2,000,000, or one-fifth of the whole number were illiterate. One in every six could not read his ballot. This vast army of illiterates, armed with the most powerful franchise ever bestowed on man, have power enough to change the results in almost all of our state and national elections.

"The uneducated freeman is a slave. The dupe of the designing and unprincipled demagogue, his powers may be employed, not only against society, but also for his own destruction.

"Many have thought, and not without reason, that illiteracy will prove to be the sand-bank upon which our ship of state will be stranded and destroyed.

"Of one thing we may be very sure; that a dangerous extension of suffrage, without commensurate education, is among the greatest perils of our free institutions. And, what is more and more alarming is that, in spite of all the efforts of church and state and all other educational agencies, illiteracy is on the increase."—American Journal of Education.

"We are now charged with the education of eighteen millions children and youth, who in less than ten years will be the nation. Of these, ten and one-half millions are enrolled in public or private schools, six millions is the average attendance, while seven and one-half millions, one or five twelfths of the whole, are growing up in absolute ignorance of the English alphabet."—H. W. Blair.

The Remedy.

The following are the principal features of the bill for federal aid for public schools that has passed the senate of the 49th congress, and is now pending in the house:

After an elaborate and exhaustive discussion of more than three weeks, the United States senate passed a national aid bill by a vote of 33 yeas and 11 nays.

Eleven other senators were in favor of this bill, but were "paired," and did not vote, making a total of 44 senators indorsing the measure.

We print two sections, that the reader may get a better idea of the amounts to be appropriated, and a part of the conditions on which the aid is to be distributed.

"An act to aid the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

"Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled: That for eight years next after the passage of this act there shall be annually appropriated from the money in the treasury the following sums, to wit:

"The first year, the sum of $7,000,000, the second year the sum of $10,000,000, the third year the sum of 15,000,000, the fourth year the sum of $12,000,000, the fifth year the sum of $11,000,000, the sixth year the sum of $9,000,000, the seventh year the sum of $7,000,000, the eighth year the sum of $5,000,000; which several sums shall be expended to secure the benefits of common-school education to all the children of the school age mentioned hereafter living in the United States.

"Sec. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several states and territories in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of 10 years and over, cannot write, bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States; such computation shall be made according to the census of 1880."

Millions for the improvement of our rivers and harbors are expended from the national treasury. Why not apply a portion of its surplus to the improvement of our future men and women? The defences of a nation are not its armies and navies, but the character of its citizenship.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of modern man and woman kind might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principles embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Don't Experiment.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems at first only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption coughs and colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Ayer's Pills cure constipation, improve the appetite, promote digestion, restore healthy action, and regulate every function. This medicine is pleasant to take and gentle in its operation. See article in Ayer's Almanac.

WHY IS IT

That rheumatism and neuralgia are so prevalent? This question has not been satisfactorily answered, but it is certain that these diseases are not only the most painful but among the most common, and some member of nearly every family in the land is the victim of one of these dread visitations. Ladies seem to be peculiarly liable to neuralgic attacks, which, in the form of neuralgic headache, pain in the back, or nervous pains are of constant occurrence. Not until the discovery of Athlophoros had any remedy been found for either rheumatism, neuralgia or nervous headache, and they were generally conceded to be incurable, but Athlophoros has been proved to be not only a certain cure for these diseases, in all their varied forms, but a safe remedy. If, in the use of Athlophoros, the bowels are kept freely open, its success is certain, and to aid this, Athlophoros Pills are recommended, which, while providing the necessary cathartic, will be found to be a valuable aid to the action of the medicine. Athlophoros is no experiment, it has been tested and has proved its wonderful efficacy.

The Athlophoros Pills are specifically prepared as a remedy for use in connection with Athlophoros for rheumatism and neuralgia and kindred complaints. Used in connection with that remedy, they are a certain cure for either of these very common and distressing diseases. They have also been found to be an invaluable remedy for any and all diseases arising from vitiated blood or general debility. They are especially valuable for nervous debility, blood poisoning, dyspepsia, distress after eating, headache, constipation, loss of appetite, and all stomach or liver troubles. For disease of women they are invaluable. These pills are perfectly harmless and may be safely used by adults or children.

Testimonials of those who have been cured will be sent free on application.

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, but where they may not be bought of the druggist, the Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send either (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 50c. for Pills.

The Great Pioneer Newspaper.

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan is enjoyed by The Detroit Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of The Free Press is the history of Michigan. Published while this commonwealth was yet a Territory, The Free Press was recognized as a power in the land at the time of her admission into the sisterhood of states. From that day to this, the energies of the paper have always been directed to, and identified with, the advancement of the state's best interest; it has grown with its growth and shared in its prosperity.

It is no wonder that The Free Press claims the right to add to the glory of being the oldest, the even more honorable title of being THE NEWSPAPER—the best for the Farmer, the Mechanic, Farmer, the best for the Family, and, when quantity and quality of matter is considered, beyond question THE CHEAPEST.

In the Daily is published in compact readable form, in addition to its own special di spatches, all the Associated Press News, Questions of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and Home News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, 8 pages Daily, 12 to 16 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is in cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 60 cents a month or $7 a year.

THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS.

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the weekly edition, a fifty-six column paper—form full of magazine newspaper reading matter, crisp, attractive, interesting and instructive. ORIGINAL STORIES both short and continued; TOPICS OF THE TIMES; THE HOUSEHOLD, contributed by women readers, LETTER FROM OUR READERS; EVERYBODY'S PORTRAIT; COMMENT; SPECIAL ARTICLES on thousands of subjects, and a complete summary of the NEWS OF THE WEEK are among its attractions. It numbers among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known authors and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is enormous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per month. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. Price, ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.

Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

Subscribers to the JOURNAL can have the Weekly Free Press and JOURNAL together for Two Dollars per year, cash in advance. By this arrangement you are saved the trouble and expense of a postage and get the JOURNAL for One Dollar a year.

National Banks.

From the Farm, Field, and Stockman, Chicago.

The following appeared in the Farm, Field and Stockman of December 4th:

"It has been fashionable in some quarters to inveigh against national banks. It is a sensatious century. They have been a blessing to the nation. According to a recent report there has been a contraction of the national bank circulation during the past year of $56,000,000. There are 2,858 national banks now in operation. Only 112 have failed since the beginning of the system in 1863. How different from the record of the wildcat state banks with which the people were pestered before the war."

It may not be altogether safe to conclude that the present national bank system is the best that we could asiply because the old "wild cat" system "pestered" the people. The issue of greenbacks at the time the nation was involved in war, and when the national treasury was depleted, was a strength in favor of the national existence never to be forgotten by the people, and this money was twice decided constitutional by the highest tribunal known to our institutions, namely, by the United States supreme court. The foregoing facts speak volumes in favor of a continuance of the national system instead of the national bank system, and the fact that all the interest paid on the bonds that constitute the bulk of the national bank circulation since the existence of the system, would have been saved to the people had greenbacks been issued to the extent of the national bank issue, is an over whelming argument against the work, and usefulness of the national bank system, and consequently also a triumphant argument in favor of the greenback system which is, and has always been, held in the highest esteem by all the people except national bankers.

In the paragraph quoted from the Farm, Field and Stockman, it is stated that the national banks have contracted their circulation $56,000,000 in the past year. This fact clearly shows not only their want of usefulness to the people, but also their dangerous character for evil. In a single year they "squeeze" the people and paralyze every interest. What would be the result should they contract the currency $56,000,000 more during the next year? This feature of the system shows its measureless power and tendency. The national bankers can, at their own will, in the future, as they have done in the past, contract the currency, and so increase the purchasing power of the balance of the currency, upon which they have made a corner, and then, after reducing prices, they can expand the currency to its old level and then sell out at greatly advanced rates the property they have so unjustly acquired at the time values were greatly depressed by their own malice.

No people should place themselves in the power of a few by placing the entire currency of the country in the hands of a few men, as the present national bank system allows. The national banks being a monopoly of the money of the nation, and the $2,858 national banks being, as they are, perfectly combined together, acting in concert and co-operating with each other, they constitute the most powerful monopoly in existence in the nation, and the most dangerous to the welfare of the people.

The interest paid by the people on the bonds that constitute the basis of the national bank circulation, and the interest charged by the banks on their issues, make a two-fold interest paid by the people.

If the government would issue greenbacks and loan to the people on real estate security, at one per cent—the same rate that it loans to the national banks—it would save to the people double interest. This vast sum, which includes all interest paid by the people on the bonds that constitute the basis of the national bank issues, which amounts to several hundred million dollars, counting from 1863, the time when the national bank law was enacted by congress—I say this immense sum would have kept the country prosperous, happy, and contented, and the droves of "tramps" and the groans of oppression, want and suffering would not have been heard or known in our land, and if now the $600,000,000 locked up in

The trouble arising out of the refusal of the cigar firm of V. Martinez, Ybor & Co., of New York, Ybor City, and Havana, to employ Cuban cigarmakers, culminated in a bloody riot at Ybor City, in the course of which the Cubans killed M. F. Martinez and fatally wounded four other Knights of Labor.

It is reported that Henry Ward Beecher and Mark Twain contemplate the production of a joint novel, the preacher to supply the pathos and the joker the humor.

New York fears an epidemic of smallpox in the tenement district.

Dr. McGlynn, who is confined to his room by sickness, has issued a statement in which he accuses the Archbishop of suppressing certain letters and parts of letters essential to the understanding of the case.

Barnum's big lion, Kennedy, aged 20 years and worth $5,000, which had been suffering from spinal-meningitis for a year, was euthanized with chloroform to relieve it of its pain. It took only six minutes' application of the anaesthetic to cause death.

The residence of H. L. Ross, at Fern City, Pa., was destroyed by fire, and his four children were cremated. The mother left the children in the house while she went on an errand, and when she returned the house was on fire. All efforts to rescue the little ones were unavailing, as the entrance to the upper floors was cut off by the flames. When the flames were extinguished the charred and blackened trunks of the four children were found in the ruins. The oldest child was 8 years old, and the youngest was unable to walk. It is supposed that they set fire to the house while playing. The parents are crazed with grief.

Four steel boilers exploded in the works of a steel and iron establishment near Allegheny City, Pa., destroying the works and killing 12 men.

Gen. Charles P. Stone, better known as Stone Pasha, died in New York last week. Gen. Stone was born in Massachusetts, entered the West Point Military Academy in 1845, served with distinction in the Mexican war, and subsequently settled in California. At the breaking out of the late civil war he was in Washington, and was the first volunteer officer sworn into the service. He was arrested in 1862 and confined in Fort Lafayette seven months for alleged misconduct in the field. No charges were preferred against him and no explanations were ever made to him for the outrage. He entered the Egyptian army in 1870, where he held the rank of Brigadier General and Ferik Pasha and general aid-de-camp to the Khedive. He was an engineer, and his last work was the construction of the Liberty pedestal in New York harbor.

WESTERN.

A man named Hawes shot and killed J. M. Berry, a saloon-keeper at Flagstaff, Arizona, for interfering in a quarrel between Hawes, his brother, and another man. Half an hour after the murder, twenty citizens organized the two brothers and shot them dead. Berry was known as a peaceable man. The Hawes brothers were disreputable.

Representatives of several packing-houses in Kansas City have made arrangements to ship their goods to Europe by way of Memphis and New Orleans. Warehouses for this trade are to be constructed in the latter city by a steamship company.

It is stated that Miss Nina Van Zandt will go with her mother to Paris, and rumors are current that the fate of Annabel Ryan is finally settled. The Chicago Times of Monday contained the following:

"What's time? and Yankee Frank Blair whom he is trying upon the mean dose of the Chicago Times morning in response to a knock for admittance, and behold a very small colored woman holding a tray with a letter and a bottle of champagne. "Well, sah, I'm left you, de explicit confidentially. She was orful particular dat everything should be cooked just right, and dat you must be sure to see it, 'cos I reckon dat dey gone to de county clerk's office. Law, honey, how do you love dat man." The basket and its contents were duly handed inside, and Miss Van Zandt's Ethiopian hand-maiden took her departure with a smile on the contents of the basket carefully, and if there is no dynamite or one of the young women's friends in the neighborhood where said the child go to Spring call, said the jader. A minute search revealed a card bearing the inscription words, 'Time flies by for her Tommy.' A golden ring, hidden away between two slices of bread, was found in the cake, and the nature was found, however, and the basket and contents was cast to spoon by one of the guards. Thus the sunshine of Annabel's life is over, and Miss Van Zandt's love for the nourishes is lost to her forever. Annabel's life is now Mamie Watson's and all the society watch she has recently received.

A Kansas City special says: Mr. Cutting, the Texas editor, is in the city, and intends to deliver a lecture on his peculiar experience. A special from Louisville, Ky., gives an account of a desperate combat between a stallion and an Alderney bull, in which both were killed.

A singular and fatal combat took place in a cattle car on the Air Line Railroad between an Alderney bull and a mighty stallion. The two were locked in a car at Depauw, Ind., by mistake. Instead of being placed in separate cars, they were placed together. A partition was built between the two animals, and they were shipped near New Albany when the stallion, first growing over the car heard a furious bellowing beneath. Investigation showed that the bull had broken down the partition between the two animals and had gone to the stallion's side, where he was now engaged in deadly conflict. The train was stopped, and the crew gathered around the car, but no means could be devised for stopping the encounter. The iron fence of the cattle horse was broken in pieces by telling after upon the bull's head, and the horse was seen in a corner with the bull's horns through his body. The last seen of the animals they were still locked together, the horse being dead and the bull fatally injured.

POLITICAL.

The Senatorial dead-lock in Indiana is unchanged, says an Indianapolis dispatch.

Two ballots were taken Friday on the election of a Senator without any change in the Allen Turpie receiving 75, Harrison 71, and Voorhees 1. It was the intention of the Democrats to continue the balloting until Monday when a Republican Senator made a motion for adjournment. Speaker Sayre declared it carried on a viva voce vote, regardless of the demands of the Democrats for a call of the roll. The Republicans claim that the Democratic majority is powerless to compel their attendance at their sessions, there being no quorum present. There will certainly be a contest. Will Cumsey other Democrat as valid? was asked of Senator Huston, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, Friday. He meant, he Senator chosen by the Democrats, would Speaker Sayre be recognized? Certainly, he replied. Will Speaker Sayre be recognized as a proper or some other Democrat receives seventy-six votes? Certainly, the Speaker is the man. He is a Democrat.

Isn't the Canadian fisheries trouble a fine scheme on the part of our Canadian neighbors to provoke a war between England and the United States, so that during the skirmish Canada may become annexed to and be a part of the United States?

The joint resolution submitting to the people next April the question of a constitutional prohibition, has passed both houses of the legislature, and is now before the people. The fight will be waged fiercely until the close of the polls, and much bitterness between neighbors will be the result.

Jay Hubbell's explanation of his vote on the prohibition amendment, that he approved it but voted no to satisfy his constituents, is a good deal like the excuse the inebriate gave for drinking. He said his judgment led him to approve total abstinence, but his appetite induced him to drink whiskey.—Bay City Press.

After the amendment, what? Will the next legislature pass the statute required to give the amendment effect before it adjourns, providing the amendment is approved by the people? That, we think, is very doubtful. Members voted for submission who will not vote for a prohibitory law.—Bay City Press.

ANOTHER GREAT STRIKE.

New York city is again the scene of conflict between capital and labor, and at this writing not less than 60,000 laboring men are out on a strike. The conflict was precipitated by the Reading Coal Company, in an attempt to reduce to wages of their coal handlers 24 cents per hour below the previous rate, which was then almost at the starvation limit. They very properly refused to work. Their places were filled with green hands, and an attempt made to continue. But the sympaty for the strikers was so strong that every tradesunion laborer coming in contact with the Reading Company's coal engaged in a boycott, and refused to handle it. Thus by sympathy the disturbance spread from one industry to another, and especially among the transportation companies, until the ocean steamship companies found it almost impossible to take on their cargo of freight and fuel and sail within several hours of schedule time. The strike has been on for a week, but no violence or rioting on the part of the strikers has yet been reported. In fact the only persons injured in any manner, as a result of the strike, was one young fellow killed by a Pinkerton detective (?), employed by the coal company to help keep the green hands at work.

Coal dealers closed their yards as fast as their stocks became exhausted, and consumers everywhere are becoming much agitated, as a coal panic is feared. Several gas companies have been compelled to close their works, and their customers have supplied themselves with lamps until the difficulty can be settled.

In one case, the failure to load in time caused a day's delay in the sailing of a Cunard line steamship, carrying the U. S. mails, and the postmaster-general was notified.

What the result may be, no one can know, but there is no doubt that the consequent paralysis of trade will extend hundreds and perhaps thousands of miles beyond the limits of New York. And all because of the ill-advised reduction of wages ordered by one greedy corporation.

Teachers' Meeting.

At the next meeting of the Charlevoix teachers', to be held Monday evening, Feb. 7th, the question of the teachers' influence outside the school room as affecting the character of the pupils, will be discussed.

Rev. W. H. McCartney will speak on "The teacher as a power in the community;" suggestions on "The character of the teacher as affecting the pupils," will be made by Miss Mason; on the "Manners and habits of the teacher," by Miss Waterbury; on the "Teachers' attitude toward the pupils out of school," by Miss Nelson. Roll call at 7.30 sharp, school time.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Text of the Bill as It Finally Passed Both Houses of Congress.

The bill passed by Congress regulating interstate commerce is as follows:

AN ACT to regulate commerce: Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad (or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property, or to the use of railroads in the receiving, handling, storing, or delivering of property, wholly within one State, and not shipped or consigned to a station outside of or to any State or Territory as aforesaid. The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any person or corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage. All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivering, storage or handling of such property, shall be reasonable and just; and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such services is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any device or by means of any other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever. Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, upon reasonable request, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for interchange of traffic between, and for the exchange of cars between, the respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in rates and charges between such connecting lines; and shall not make any rule or regulation which shall prevent the prompt forwarding of any such traffic to the destination thereof by the shortest route in the regular direction of business over the lines of such carriers, and shall not route any such traffic over the line of any such carrier by a longer route than any other regular route for such traffic which shall be offered by any other such carrier, when the rates, fares, and charges for the transportation of such traffic by such longer route are not greater than by such other route: Provided, however, that upon proper application to the Commission any common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the Commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of the act.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of earnings each day of the week shall be a separate offense.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep for public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its railroad, as shall be from time to time required by the Commission and published in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commission, and shall exhibit those rates and fares and charges for the information of persons who may apply therefor; and the Commission may, at its discretion, order such schedules to be printed in such form and manner as it may direct, and may from time to time make changes in the form of such schedules of rates, fares, and charges as may be found advisable; and no common carrier shall be allowed to charge or demand or collect or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever. Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, on reasonable notice, furnish to the shipper a reasonable quantity of cars for the transportation of his property, and the charges made for the furnishing of cars shall be reasonable and just; and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 7. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any device or by means of any other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, for which the common carrier is authorized to transport and carry free or at reduced rates, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 8. That in any case in which any injury is done to any person by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, such common carrier shall be liable to the person injured in the amount of the damages sustained in consequence of such injury, to be ascertained by the court or by a jury in a civil action, with costs and a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed and taxed by the court, and collected as a part of the costs of the suit; and if any such common carrier shall be found guilty of wilfully doing or causing to be done any act or thing forbidden or declared to be unlawful in this act, such common carrier shall be liable to the person injured in the amount of the damages sustained in consequence of such wilful act or thing, to be ascertained as aforesaid, with costs and a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed and taxed by the court, and collected as a part of the costs of the suit.

SEC. 9. That any person or persons claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act may either make complaint to the Commission hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit in his own behalf for the recovery of the damages for the injury complained of; but such person shall not have the right to pursue both of such modes of redress at the same time, nor shall he have the two methods of procedure herein mentioned in any case, but he shall be held to election of remedies; the recovery of damages in the courts before which there shall be joined as co-defendants the president, director, or trustee, or agent of the corporation or company, who shall have wilfully, knowingly, and, of fault, and not in such case, and may compel the attendance of witnesses upon the trial of such action, in any district in any one such case, the claim that any such person or evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying in such case, but such evidence shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 10. That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person or party, shall wilfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall wilfully omit or fail to do any act, matter or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or wilfully suffer or permit any act, matter or thing so required to be done, or shall aid or abet in any such omission, shall be deemed guilty of any misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof in any District Court of the United States for the district in which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense.

SEC. 11. That a commission is hereby created and established to be known as the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall be composed of five Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for the term of one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1887, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the Commissioner whom he succeeds. Any Commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three of the Commissioners shall be appointed from any political party. No person in the employ of or under any contract with any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or pursuing any business or vocation in any manner pecuniarily interested therein, shall be appointed or shall serve in any office, said Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or owning any stock or bonds of any such common carrier, or who shall be pecuniarily interested in such stock or bonds, shall be appointed or shall serve as such Commissioner; Provided, however, that upon the first appointment of Commissioners under this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the Commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of the act.

SEC. 12. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, after the expiration of ninety days from the passage of this act, to pool its freights with those of any other common carrier or carriers engaged in the business of transporting freight, or to divide between them the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of earnings each day of the week shall be a separate offense.

SEC. 13. That the Commission hereinafter provided for shall execute the provisions of this act, as far as the same shall be found to be in force, to all such common carriers as are parties to any such pooling or division of earnings aforesaid, and to enforce the full penalties against any such common carrier for violations of this act, so far as the same shall be in force and applicable to such cases.

SEC. 14. That whenever any common carrier shall file with the Commission created by this act any schedule showing a new rate or fare or any modification of a rate or fare or charge or any part or portion thereof, or any classification of freight or any part or portion thereof, the Commission is hereby empowered, and it shall be its duty, to investigate the rates, fares, and charges, as provided in this section, and to determine whether they are in violation of any of the provisions of this act, or of any other section of this act, or of any other law, and to make such order in respect to the same as may be authorized by this act, and to require such common carrier to conform its rates, fares, and charges to such order; and in determining its order the Commission may hold such rate, fare, or charge, or any part or portion thereof, or any classification of freight or any part or portion thereof, in abeyance for a period of six months, and cause a hearing to be had concerning the propriety thereof; and if at the expiration of such period of six months it shall not have concluded such investigation, it may, upon notice, and for cause shown, extend the period of suspension for six months more

Everybody Should Drink Milk.

It was a long, low, unfinished apartment, the rough joists and beams being simply coated with white-wash. The clear ash floor was scrubbed to a snowy whiteness and the few chairs that the room contained were placed against the wall in a prim sort of way that seemed to indicate that they had not been displaced in some time. Along one side of this apartment were racks upon which were rows of milk, tier on tier, nearly to the ceiling. Milk cans of various sizes stood about, and a long iron sink contained milk-bottles that a young maid was busily scalding. It was, in fact, the milk-room of a Jersey dairyman. The young girl informed a New York Mail and Express reporter that her father would be in in a few minutes. He came presently, followed by two stout farm hands, each bearing two brimming pails of milk, which were speedily transferred to newly scalded bottles. The farmer remarked that those Aldderneys would have to get more corn-meal, because they were invalid cows and must be well fed. Then he noticed the visitor and nodded a good morning.

"Why are they invalid cows?" asked the newsman.

"Why, you see, there are a certain class of customers who drink lots of milk simply for medicine. There's a lady on Madison avenue, in New York, that takes three quarts a day, and I'm told she drinks it all herself. Some of those people are regular cranks, and the moment you give them milk from a new cow they spot it. There was a little Jersey heifer, three years old, that used to give beautiful milk, almost as golden as the butter that could be made from it, and this I furnished to a consumptive individual on Twenty-third street. He seemed to thrive on it, and actually began to gain in flesh, though his physician had assured him that there was little hope. Well, I got a chance to sell the cow, and as she gave so little milk I did so. My customer was nearly well when I told him that this accounted for the change in the milk. He inquired anxiously as to who purchased her, and sent post haste to the man. He was just in time to prevent the animal's becoming beef. The butcher thus saved from the butcher's knife was placed in a few stalls, fed like a queen, and the owner had the two or more quarts of milk furnished every day for his own use.

"I often drink milk myself when I don't feel well, and it always does me good. Nearly every millionaire has individual customers who take milk purely because they think it strengthens the system."

A prominent city physician subsequently seen by the reporter, said: "I regard milk as a better tonic than most preparations. It helps the impoverished blood, and furnishes a nutriment easily taken by the system. The principal parts of milk are the olein or oily parts, the casein or cheesy portion, and the phosphates of lime and potash. In butter we get the olein, in cheese the olein and casein together. In cases of typhoid fever I give milk altogether, and I have known many a patient to be brought from death's door through its agency.

"It is now a common practice to inject milk into the blood when it is impoverished. That fluid takes it up and appropriates it in some unaccountable way, and people's lives have been saved in this way. I drink a glass of milk every night before going to bed, and have for years."

A Fable.

Two oysters, one of which was slick and the other well, were taking a walk when the healthy oyster said:

"You are a miserable creature. You are so infirm that you can't carry your shell, and if an enemy were to get after you, you would be too weak to make your escape. Now look at me; why don't you brace up and look like this? I feel like an athlete and I have a digestion like an ostrich."

Just then two men came along, and each one swallowed an oyster. But the sick one made a supreme effort, climbed out of the stomach into which it had been forced, and made its escape; while the healthy oyster died an ignominious death in a tank of gastric juice.

Moral: This false bracing the supremacy of a heroic spirit over the infirmities of the flesh.—Life.

A Warning.

Pain is given the race for a warning as of the presence of danger and disease. Any little excitement of an unusual or irregular nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of modern man and womankind might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness and other unwholesome conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Wonderful Cures.

Dr. G. W. Crouter, retail druggist of Charlevoix, Mich., says: We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for six years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of prolonged consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We advertise them always. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

ANOTHER SUDDEN DEATH.

Hardly a week passes without the mention by the newspapers of sudden deaths, and of late the alarming frequency of the statement that death was caused by rheumatism or neuralgia of the heart cannot fail to have been noticed. In all probability many deaths attributed to heart disease are caused by these terrible diseases, which are far more dangerous than is generally considered. Is there any remedy for cure? The best answer to such a question is given by those who have been cured by the use of Athlophoros.

Mrs. Carrie Lee, Kenosha, Wis., says: "I don't believe any one ever suffered with rheumatism as I did and lived to tell the tale; neither I nor my people expected to see me walk about again, and at times despaired of my life. I was stricken during the month of January. I had taken a severe cold in the cars on my way to Chicago; I had remained home a few days when I was taken so suddenly that in a few minutes from its first appearance I was so prostrated that I had to be carried to my bed-room, where I remained until the following May. During the interval of January and May the suffering I bore could not be described. I was treated by the best physicians, who had different ones in consultation without any material change. My arms and limbs were drawn so much since that I stood less than one foot, and was helpless to assist myself in any way. I was in the constant care of a nurse both night and day. One of the nurses I had applied magnetism, but that was a failure. I commenced taking Athlophoros, and could feel its effects upon me as soon as I commenced taking it. It was certainly marvelous. I was soon able to straighten my limbs, and when I had taken five bottles I was free from rheumatism."

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, but where they cannot be bought of the druggist the Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send either (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 50c. for Pills.

Sufferers from kidney disease, dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness, nervous debility, diseases of the liver, constipation, headache, impure blood, &c., Athlophoros Pills are unequaled.

The Great Pioneer Newspaper.

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan is enjoyed by The Detroit Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of The Free Press is the history of Michigan. Published while this commonwealth was yet a Territory, The Free Press was recognized as a power in the land at the time of her admission into the sisterhood of states. From that day to this, the energies of the paper have always been directed to, and identified with, the advancement of the state's best interest; it has grown with its growth and shared in its prosperity.

It is no wonder that The Free Press's aim the right to add to the glory of being the oldest, the even more honorable title of being the newspaper—the best for the Merchant, Mechanic, Farmer, the best for the Family, and, when quantity and quality of matter is considered, beyond question THE CHEAPEST.

In the Daily is published in compact readable form, in addition to its own special dispatches, all the Associated Press News, Market reports of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and State News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current Literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, 8 pages Daily, 12 to 16 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is 15 cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 60 cents a month or $7 a year.

THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS.

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the weekly edition, a fifty-six column paper—twice full of magazine newspaper reading matter, crisp, attractive, interesting and instructive. ORIGINAL STORIES, both short and continued, FOR THE FARM, FOR THE HOUSEHOLD, contributed by women readers, LATEST NEWS AND PUZZLES, POINTED EDITORIAL COMMENT; SPECIAL ARTICLES on those topics of interest which are of a character to make the NEWS OF THE WEEK are among its attractions. It numbers among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known of novelists and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is enormous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per week. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. PRICE, ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.

Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

☞ Subscribers to the JOURNAL can have the Weekly Free Press for one year by paying Two Dollars per year, cash in advance. By this arrangement you are saved the trouble and cost of remittance and get the JOURNAL for One Dollar a year.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by J. Milo Eaton and Flora J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. Sweetland, dated April twenty-first, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds, for the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, on the twenty-ninth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, in liber "M" of mortgages, on page 501, at six o'clock in the afternoon of said date, is now owned by the said Mary J. Sweetland; and whereas default has been made in the payment of an installment of principal, due and payable twenty-sixth, A. D. 1886, and in the non-fulfillment of said mortgage; it is hereby stipulated and agreed that in the payment of any installment of principal, or of any part thereof on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid and in arrears for the space of ninety days, the whole principal sum, with the arrearages of interest thereon shall, at the option of the said obligee or her assigns, become due and payable immediately thereafter; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the installment of principal and interest due on the day when the whole amount due; and whereas said installments and interest have not been paid and in arrears for the space of over ninety days, the said Mary J. Sweetland, mortgagee, does hereby declare it her option and does hereby elect to have the principal sum named in said mortgage and the interest thereon, now due and payable, which, by the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative; and whereas there is now claimed to be due and payable as aforesaid upon said mortgage, the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars; Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the north front door of the court house, in the village of Charlevoix, Michigan, (that being the place and building in which the circuit court for the Charlevoix county is holden), the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with interest at ten per cent and all legal costs, including such attorney fee provided for in said mortgage as is allowed by the statute in such case made and provided, which said premises are situated in the said mortgage, as follows, to wit: All of those certain pieces or parcels of land situate in the township of Wilson, in the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit: lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, and the s½ of J. Milo Eaton's Addition to the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof, together with the tenements, hereditaments and all the appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining or thereunto appertained.

Dated February 26, A. D. 1887.

Around the County.

East Jordan.

From the Enterprise.

F. J. Meech and C. J. Grier, of Charlevoix, were here Saturday on railroad business. We imagine they heard something drop.

Why cannot East Jordan have a regular telephone exchange? We believe the time has arrived that we could have a good exchange, and we hope to see it in the near future.

Word received from A. W. Ballou states that he will commence operations on the Intermediate and Arms Lakes R. R. as soon as the weather will permit. Toot! Toot! Ding! Dong! All aboard for Intermediate. How does that sound.

The Pine Lake Lumber company expect to start their mills in a few days.

Lumbermen are enjoying the present snow, which measures about two feet in the woods and now is settling away about as fast as new snow falls, bringing the logging roads in excellent condition. Messrs. Glenn & Porter expect to start their mill near Ironton. They have sawed the Welch mill across the lake and will stock that with cedar and hemlock, and start it as soon as navigation opens in the spring.

The village is to sail under incorporation colors in the near future. A bill has been introduced in the legislature to incorporate under the name of East Jordan, that portion of the territory now platted as South Lake, excepting Boyne's addition thereto, also some unplatted lands on sections 24 and 13 to fill the tract of land out more squarely in shape. South Arm refuses to incorporate with East Jordan, not wishing to change its present name and a fear of losing the postoffice which is now located only about eighty rods from the East Jordan postoffice. All so they claim to have better railroad facilities and are going to be a little "burg" of their own.

A co-operative mercantile association has been organized here mostly among the farmers and laboring men of this vicinity with a capital stock of $25,000, about one-half of which has already been taken. Its officers elected recently are: S. M. Richardson, president; R. D. Bowman, vice president; Frank E. Fogg, secretary; Jas. B. Palmeter, treasurer and cashier; H. P. Bashore, manager of store. This organization grows out of the haggling manner in which our Business Men's Protective association was organized. By the recent re-organization of the Merchant's Protective Association it is hoped to put all parties on a more amicable footing. The co-operative association are negotiating with John Chamberlin for his stock of general merchandise. While this will not increase the present number of stores, it will change the management. Should this change be made Mr. Chamberlin has signified his intention of investing in a manufacturing enterprise here.

Eveline.

A trifle breezy last week.

Hay is a scarce article in this section, at $16.

Wanted—a little milder weather. Feb. 8—You have it.—ED. JOURNAL.]

Mr. Homer McKee was very sick last week, but is better this writing.

Several of our farmers are selling potatoes readily at fifty cents per bushel.

A dance at Wm. Staley's last Wednesday evening. A good time is the report.

Eugene Bedwin and wife, of Hayes, were in Eveline Sunday, visiting Mrs. Robert Bedwin, near Ironton.

We are informed that Mrs. John Peterson, of Ironton, leaves this week for her old home in Pennsylvania, to visit her brethren.

The Enterprise wishes to know how its readers like the serial story. As we are a reader of that sheet, we will say that it is "just immense!"

The winter term of school in district No. 3 closed last Wednesday evening with success. Miss Seymour, the teacher, left Friday for her home in Ionia.

It is said that at this season of the year the size of a horse blanket measures the size of the soul of the owner of the horse it covers. No blanket, no soul,—only a gizzard.

Feb. 8, 1887.

Wilson.

Snow two and one half feet deep.

The saw-mill is running night and day at present.

We saw Wm LeClair, of South Arm on our streets on Saturday last.

School closed two days week before last on account of the illness and death of the teacher's sister.

Cold weather strikes us here as elsewhere, but "Old Thermom" has only registered 20° below yet.

Sorry East Jordan don't feel interested in the railroad. Guess it must be because it is likely to strike South Arm only; which is a seperate town, although East Jordan does claim the hoop factory and advertising the town to strangers.

Miss Emma Jones, formerly of this place but more recently of Boyne City, died at her home on Jan. 27th. She had been sick several months but her death was not looked for. Her parents and sisters have the heart felt sympathy of all in this bereavement.

We are pained to record the death of John Knuttle of this place, who died of blood poisoning (caused by a sore finger), last week. Though only living here a little over a year, he was always a good neighbor. The services were conducted by Elder Robinson, of East Jordan. The family who are so suddenly stricken with this affliction have the tender sympathy of neighbors.

Harbard.

Fine weather since the rain.

A young son of Robert Trimble's is very sick. He is attended by Dr. Lewis.

Mr. Henry Wagner had the misfortune to cut his leg quite badly while working in Sims Baker's swamp.

Mr. and Mrs. George Burns are happy over a young daughter that arrived last week. George should order a plug hat.

One Cause of Typhoid Fever.

Chicago, Jan. 17, 1887.

EDITOR JOURNAL, Charlevoix, Mich: Dear Sir—I notice, through your paper, that there have been a number of cases of typhoid fever in your town during the past few months. The question has been asked, as a result of this disease, "Is Charlevoix a health place to live in?" Your paper is largely circulated among Chicago people, and many are wondering if they are taking any risks by spending any time there during the summer season.

While I have been surprised at the large number of typhoid cases, I have tried to imagine the cause. Surely some of your able physicians have hit upon the cause

EASTERN.

A new bank, to be known as the Western National Bank of New York, has been organized, with a capital of $3,000,000, all of which has been subscribed. C. N. Jordan, Treasurer of the United States, is to be its President.

Edward Younger, 52 years, has been arrested at New York for the murder of the butchered man found in a trunk at Baltimore. The motive of the crime was robbery.

John L. Sullivan, champion pugilist of the world, was knocked out by an unnamed but scientific New York doctor. The way it was done is thus told in a dispatch from that city:

Sullivan came here to get the best surgical opinion as to his broken arm. They went to the office of Dr. Sayre, who, after an examination of the injured member, said that it had been set with the palm downward instead of the reverse, and that the fighter so cursed with his friends for doctoring by a fistic glance, observed Sullivan's face turn pale. The patient then put his left arm on Sullivan's forearm, and with the right strap the wrist, and gave the arm a sudden wrench which broke the bones under a second time. Sullivan sat up and looked at the operation with a sickly cry of joy, and said, "Let me have the cushions in a dead fainting spell." Sullivan rather vividly appreciates soon brought him back to consciousness, and he found his left arm in splints. Dr. Sayre, as Dr. Sayre says it should do, but is a fighter himself out, and because fort or wanted to see the champion fight. He was "roughroaded out after awhile, however, and "his arm was bound in plaster of Paris. The arm was he will be all right four weeks hence, and will be as strong as ever.

The Germania Savings Bank of Jersey City has closed its doors on account of the disappearance of Cashier Schroeder with $50,000.

Edward Unger, of New York, has confessed the murder of August Buhle, whose mutilated body he shipped to Baltimore in a trunk.

Near St. Idale, Pennsylvania, a young wife killed her brutal husband, who had threatened her life. She was immediately placed on trial for murder, without counsel or witnesses, and when the Judge directed the jury to acquit her the court room resounded with cheers.

At the Belmont residence on Fifth avenue, New York, Raymond Belmont, a son of the millionaire banker, undertook to practice shoeing in a pulley in the basement. His sole companion was a night watchman, who was closing a door when Belmont suddenly sent a bullet through his own skull. The coroner pronounces the case one of pure accident.

WESTERN.

When Mrs. Calabek of Cleveland murdered her three children and suicided, a Bohemian sheet in that city printed a very graphic description of the crime. Frank Roth, a Bohemian and a well-to-do merchant who lived happily, read the story to his wife, who had him reread to her twice. She next took the paper to a neighbor, and had it read twice more. Then she sent her mother to a grocery for poison, and in her absence forced a dose of rat poison down the throat of her babe, taking another dose herself. The woman died in great agony, and the babe expired soon after.

Frank Girard, for the past eleven years night policeman at the Kankakee, Ill., was found dead in an alley with a bullet hole in his temple.

The cowboy son of Senator Fair shot at ex-Congressman Page because the latter gentleman refused to "have a drink."

In the Missouri penitentiary Fred Wittrock testified that Messenger Fottering-ham is innocent of the charges brought against him in connection with the San Francisco train robbery.

John Dahlman, an old citizen of Milwaukee, hanged himself in his barn after suffering from a paralytic stroke. He left an estate valued at $200,000 or more.

Miss Van Zandt is, says a Chicago paper, engaged in getting ready for publication a history of Spies and the other condemned anarchists. An interesting feature of the book is an autobiographical sketch by Spies, in which he blasphemously compares himself to Christ, and finds an analogy in the crucifixion to his own condemnation for inciting the Haymarket massacre.

A Portland, Ore., dispatch says that "a high wind sprung up on the west slope of the Cascade Mountains, east of Tacoma, Washington Territory. About eleven miles from the west end of the Northern Pacific tunnel a blow a large tree down into a camp where a number of Chinese laborers were sleeping. Nine bodies had been removed, at last accounts, and a dozen or more were injured. There is three to four feet of snow on the ground, and several bodies are still supposed to be buried in snow under the fallen timber. At Hunt's camp, a few miles west of the Chinese camp, a similar accident occurred among white laborers, and six were severely injured; none, it is believed, fatally."

A stay of execution until April 1 has been granted Brooks, alias Maxwell, who murdered Prellier at St. Louis.

SOUTHERN.

Three masked men entered the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe Railroad depot, at Richmond, Tex., and, at the point of a pistol, compelled the watchman to open the doors leading into the inner offices. They then attempted to drill through the safe in the station agent's office. Failing, two of them went to the station agent's house and forced him to get to the station and open the safe. They secured $1,400 in money, and escaped.

The planters of Hinds, Amite, and Rankin counties, Mississippi, have felt compelled to give notice to emigration agents to stop coaxing the negroes to the swamps of the Yazoo delta. From four hundred to six hundred colored men daily pour into Vicksburg. The emigration from Greene Co., by Alabama, is the largest of all.

Five of the men engaged in the train robbery at Gordon, Texas, have been arrested, and the prospect is that the other three will be captured.

Miss Annie T. Howard, daughter of the lottery king of New Orleans, has purchased a lot on the corner of Camp and Delord streets, on which to erect and establish a memorial library of 100,000 volumes, to be turned over to Tulane University.

The citizens of Springfield, Ky., lynched Ludlow Cornish, who took the life of Lulu Green because she refused to marry him, and also undertook to kill her mother and sister.

WASHINGTON.

A committee of the National Woman Suffrage Association called on the President last week, and presented a memorial asking him to veto the Edmunds bill or the Pendleton substitute therefor, whichever shall pass Congress, proposing to disfranchise non-polygamous women of Utah. The President said he would give the memorial his careful consideration. He recognized that it was a serious matter to disfranchise any class.

At Leavenworth, thirty-five masked men broke into the jail, took out a negro rapist named Richard Wood, and dragged him to death in the street by a rope attached to the saddle of a masked horseman. No effort is likely to be made to arrest the lynchers.

A final dividend of 5 per cent. in favor of creditors of the World's Exposition at New Orleans has been made by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury from the Congressional appropriation of $500,000.

The first serious attempt this session to enact a law to prevent Senators and Representatives from acting as counsel, attorneys, or agents of railroad companies was made last week by Representative McLae, of Arkansas. McLae asked unanimous consent to put the bill upon its passage, and it looked as though the House was about to do itself the credit of promptly placing its condemnation upon the pernicious practice of influencing legislation in favor of corporations by employing legislators as counsel. Presently Mr. Parker, the New York lawyer who was conspicuous in opposition to the bill to quiet titles of settlers upon Des Moines River lands, arose and objected with the absent excuse that the subject was one that should have mature consideration.

Under the recent act of Congress refunding the free-delivery system, applications for carriers have been made by ninety-five towns having the specified qualifications.

The Treasury has approved the following sales: Grazing premises to two soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war; ceding public land to the city of San Antonio, Texas, providing for a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery, and for the construction of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain army posts; for completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kansas.

POLITICAL.

The Committee on Railroads of the Nebraska House have recommended the passage of the bill repealing the Railway Commission act.

The resolution for the submission to popular vote of a proposition to amend the State Constitution, which was adopted by both houses of the Michigan Legislature, has been signed by the Governor, and will be voted on in April next.

A bill is now before the Indiana Legislature the provisions of which are of so extraordinary a character as to make the proposed law of general interest. The bill simply provides that in case of wilful homicide in which the slayer is the father, husband, or guardian of a seduced girl or woman, and the slain is proven to have been the seducer, such homicide or manslaughter shall not be. Under such circumstances the offense of slaying is reduced to a misdemeanor, punishable only by fine, without imprisonment. This is the first instance of an attempt to enact a law which would, under any circumstances, make the willful taking of human life a simple misdemeanor. It is understood that a similar bill is to be introduced in the Illinois Legislature.

The Tennessee Senate has passed on its final reading the prohibition amendment to the constitution, the vote being—yeas, 21; nays, 7.

A bill prohibiting marriages between white and colored persons has been introduced in the Illinois Senate.

A bill empowering women to vote at municipal elections passed the Kansas Senate —25 to 14.

A nephew states that it is not the President-Elect's wants, but that he wants someone elected friendly to him, who would make him Secretary of State, where he left a great deal of work he desires to complete.

It appears to be pretty well settled that Mr. Manning is to leave the Treasury Department to take the presidency of the organized national bank in New York. It is also understood that Mr. Joseph, Treasurer of the United States, will resign to become cashier of the same institution.

An investigation is demanded in the Minnesota Legislature of the charges that the saloon men have raised a big bonfire fund to defeat high-license legislation.

The joint resolution for submitting to popular vote a prohibition amendment to the Constitution was adopted in the Texas House —56 to 21.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

The National Legislative Committee of the Knights of Labor petitioned President Cleveland to vote the interstate commerce bill.

The Illinois Labor Convention, in session at Springfield, declined to ask a new trial for the Chicago anarchists.

New York telegram: "Twenty thousand men are now on strike among the coal shovelers, longshoremen, freight-handlers, and men employed on the river front in New York City, and the number is augmented to close on to 40,000 by the strikers on the Brooklyn and Jersey shores. In consequence it is impossible to secure bottoms for any of steamers for Europe or coastwise to leave port."

Worcester (Mass.) dispatch: "Notice has been posted in most of the boot and shoe factories here and in Spencer that these factories will be open only to such operatives as will agree to deal individually with the firm employing them. This movement affects a large number of operatives throughout Worcester County, and it is understood that the manufacturers are determined to free themselves from dictation by the Knights of Labor."

Unpaid miners in Montana captured four of their employers and shut down the works. A Helena dispatch gives the following particulars of the affair:

Hon. A. J. Seligman, H. W. Child, Chinch, and Thomas Wilson, officers of the Butte Mining Company, went to the mine near Wicks, to close down the works and operations, as the company has been running behind for several months. On their arrival they were surrounded by about 200 miners who had not received their pay for the last two months wages due. The men closed down the works and took possession of the town. They also were finally allowed to come to Helena to raise funds to pay the men, threatening if the money is not secured by their return, Seligman is a son of Jesse Seligman, of Seligman & Co., bankers, New York, who have contracted last month, and had just arrived with the money.

Eighteen hundred of the strikers in the Passaic Cotton Factories, in Jersey City returned to work at the firm's terms.

The Connellsville coke syndicate have advanced the price of coke from $1.50 to $2 per ton.

All the miners at the Vale, Acadia and Albion collieries in Nova Scotia, strunk on account of a reduction in wages. In one of the mines, 1,200 men and boys, altogether, joined in the strike.

Indianapolis special: "A sensation was created here among the Knights of Labor by the receipt of an order, purporting to have come from the General Executive Board, to the effect that all signatures belonging to the International Union must be dropped from membership in the local and district assemblies. This is the first step toward carrying out the programme adopted at Richmond by the General Assembly, which struck a blow at all trades-unionists. Typographers and molders here are very indignant, and I do not blow quite as severely as the cigarmakers."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The general opinion among the representative Canadians is that war is out of the question. The commercial relations of the two countries are too intimate to permit any fighting.

Last week's statement of the visible supply of grain in the United States and Canada shows a decrease of 106,193 bushels of wheat, 166,551 bushels of corn, 49,322 bushels of oats, 965 bushels of rye, and 102,546 bushels of barley.

Articles of incorporation have been filed at Springfield for the Chicago, Texas and Kansas City road, with a capital stock of $2,000,000.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: The announcement is made that the imperial government will not assent to the protection of the American fisheries. To the people of the United States, doubtless, this will be a startling but palatable information, but as a matter of fact it is simply Republican fiction, established before the Washington treaty commission was appointed.

English shareholders in the Pennsylvania Railroad Company demand larger dividends.

FOREIGN.

The British Ministry is said to miss Lord Randolph Churchill severely in the House of Commons. The Tories were able to make a fair show with him out of the Ministry, but the Ministry is in a bad way. The Liberals are powerless as the Tories, and a prospective return to power. It is openly claimed that the Ministry will not last through February. The defeat of Mr. Gladstone at Leicester is making the Liberals feel good.

The Belfast catalogram states that some soldiers of the West Surrey regiment massacred a number of Catholic civilians. The latter retaliated by throwing stones. Over 100 persons were arrested by the police, and the troops were called out to restore quiet. The rioting was renewed the following day, when the police and the public exchanged shots. Many persons are said to have been injured. William O'Brien, speaking at Bodyke, County Limerick, said that if Dunsmore could meet a police man to man and rifle to rifle in the open field he for one would promptly abandon speaking, and the next speech the destroyers of the people's homes would hear would be from the bullets of the people's guns. Lord Dunsandle offered to refund the tenants of Glenay tenants 25 per cent, and to reinstate the evicted, which is a great victory for the tenants.

In other exportation of planks from Germany to France by way of Switzerland has been forbidden.

By the collision of the British emigrant ship Kapunda with an unknown vessel off the coast of Ireland 250 lives were lost.

Mr. Cocchi has decided to accept the seat in the House of Commons of Lord Randolph Churchill, who has offered to resign for his benefit.

A cable dispatch from Berlin says: The nomination of the National Liberal party has issued a manifesto to the electors. They say: "Never since the Franco-German war has the danger of a great conflict been so imminent. No statesman can form any certain conclusion as to the future, even for a few weeks. The peace of Europe rests at this moment solely upon the strength, readiness for action, and moral preterrorities of the German army. The National Liberals are confident that the voice of universal suffrage will pronounce the right decision. An unpropitious issue of the elections will bring down upon the country the with all its horrors, and, even with the best results, heavy losses."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Hon. John H. Reagan, at present a Representative in Congress from Texas, has been chosen to succeed Hon. Sam Bell Maxey as United States Senator from that State. The Senatorial deadlocks in Indiana, West Virginia, and New Jersey continue at this writing (Thursday). The New Jersey Senate organized by the election of a Republican President pro tem., and then adjourned for one week. In the Arkansas House of Representatives Speaker Hewitt referred to the obstructive tactics of a defeated candidate for the Speakership, for which he was promptly denounced by Representatives Hudgins as a liar. Every member rose from his seat, but mutual friends of the belligerents brought about a suspension of hostilities. In the Illinois House a bill has been introduced "to provide for the preservation of health in the sale and use of whisky." It provides that all whisky must be two years and nine months old. In the Wisconsin House a resolution has been offered to amend the Constitution so as to prohibit members of the Legislature and courts of record from receiving free railroad transportation. The Alabama House has passed a bill making the keeping of a gambling house a felony, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. The Pennsylvania House has adopted a concurrent resolution requesting the Congressional delegation from the San Juan Convention and building of sea-coast defenses and the strengthening of the navy.

George De B. Keim is the Democratic nominee for Mayor of Philadelphia.

A bill was introduced in the Senate on the 1st inst. to relieve the sufferers by the failure of the Freedman's Savings & Trust Company. Senator Cullom introduced an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a survey to be made of the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers from Lake Michigan to Joliet, with a view to improvement of the rivers so as to establish a waterway 160 feet wide and seven feet deep between the places named. A bill to create a canal from Joliet to Lake Michigan, in accordance with the above specified plan, the channel to be 160 feet wide and seven feet deep, to connect the Illinois River with the Illinois to the Mississippi River, at or above the mouth of Rock River, was also introduced. It is understood that President Cleveland intend to fill a pending appointment on the Supreme Bench on Monday next. There is no serious objection being that the death of the soldier was caused in the line of duty, but in a quarrel with a Canadian citizen, the question of Invalid Pensions occupied the entire time in the House relief of Mrs. John A. Logan and Mrs. Sherman. Logan introduced the bill to allow Mrs. Logan more than $50 per month for life for his services as a soldier and statesman, and Mr. Sherman said he would support the measure, the committee says that should Congress pass the bill, it will be a great mistake and by it should be carried out it would increase the pension roll $100,000 annually, and would be a precedent for the widows of the soldiers, and that the passage of such a bill would be a premature relief from actual embarrassment or poverty. Senator Logan said that if the brave and worthy soldiers were denied the privilege of a pension, it would be a great injustice to connect the death of their husbands with the war. Senator Pendleton said that the case of Mrs. Logan was advanced that the death of Gen. Logan was caused by his service in the war, and it is a well-known fact that Mrs. Logan was in ill health for a long time before her husband died, and that her husband's death was caused by a long and lingering illness. It was well known that Gen. Logan was a very poor man, and that his widow was in very poor circumstances. Estimate of $12 was made for the death of the husbands with their military service. Senator Logan said that the death of Gen. Logan was caused by the death of Gen. Logan was attributable to his service in the war. Senator Pendleton said that Gen. Logan was in possession of an ample estate, and that the committee embraces the highest regard for her, both on account of her high character and services to her husband, and that she is a great and just recipient of General Logan as a soldier, and his social and political rank, and that the committee believed that the passage of this act would be a premature relief from actual poverty. Senator Logan said that the committee are unanimous in the opinion that the case is very peculiar, and that the House proposes to recommend the passage of both bills. After describing Gen. Logan's services in the military and civil service of the country, he said that Congress, Frank P. Blair, Senator Logan, and others, had offered to pay for such services, if such services is not possible, and the committee believe that the bill should be passed. Senator Logan made a widow by his sacrifice of himself, and the committee feel that it is not too much to do for her." The minority report, signed by Senators Pendleton and Beck, contains the following: "We cannot agree that it is reasonably certain that Congress would give the memorial his careful consideration. He recognized that it was a serious matter to disfranchise any class.

At Leavenworth, thirty-five masked men broke into the jail, took out a negro rapist named Richard Wood, and dragged him to death in the street by a rope attached to the saddle of a masked horseman. No effort is likely to be made to arrest the lynchers.

A final dividend of 5 per cent. in favor of creditors of the World's Exposition at New Orleans has been made by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury from the Congressional appropriation of $500,000.

The first serious attempt this session to enact a law to prevent Senators and Representatives from acting as counsel, attorneys, or agents of railroad companies was made last week by Representative McLae, of Arkansas. McLae asked unanimous consent to put the bill upon its passage, and it looked as though the House was about to do itself the credit of promptly placing its condemnation upon the pernicious practice of influencing legislation in favor of corporations by employing legislators as counsel. Presently Mr. Parker, the New York lawyer who was conspicuous in opposition to the bill to quiet titles of settlers upon Des Moines River lands, arose and objected with the absent excuse that the subject was one that should have mature consideration.

Under the recent act of Congress refunding the free-delivery system, applications for carriers have been made by ninety-five towns having the specified qualifications.

The Treasury has approved the following sales: Grazing premises to two soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war; ceding public land to the city of San Antonio, Texas, providing for a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery, and for the construction of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain army posts; for completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kansas.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The agricultural experiment station bill passed the Senate, Jan. 27. It directs the establishment in connection with the agricultural colleges of a department to be known and designated as an "Agricultural Experiment Station." Where there are two such colleges in one State the annual appropriation is to be divided between them. The bill appropriates $15,000 a year for each State, divided between them unless the State Legislature shall otherwise direct. The stations are to conduct experiment stations, to conduct original researches or to verify experiments on the physiology of plants, to ascertain the diseases to which the plants are severally subject and the remedies therefor, to determine the relative adaptation of useful plants, the economical advantages of relative cropping; the quality of soils, the composition of manures, the analysis of soils and water, the chemical composition of manures; the adaptation of various kinds of grasses and forage plants, the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals, the composition and economic properties involved in the production of butter and cheese, and such other investigations or experiments bearing directly on agricultural industry of the United States as may be deemed advisable by the Board of Control. The House bill for the relief of dependent parents and widows of deceased soldiers and sailors was taken up, and a substitute was adopted directing an investigation to be made by the Secretary of the Interior as to the number of such parents and widows who are dependent upon their sons for support. The House bill to provide for the preservation of health in the Columbia River by salmon traps was passed. A bill to amend Revised Statutes so as to provide that no person shall be engaged in the business of a distiller, wholesale or retail liquor dealer, or manufacturer of tobacco, cigars, or snuff, or shall be entitled to the benefits of Internal Revenue laws until the dealer has first made a complete and true statement of the place of business, and of the name of any person to office, it is contemplated by the business to be carried on, and the name of the manufacturer to the same office immediately thereafter, was reported from the Judiciary and referred to the Committee on Finance and Elections. The House passed the river and harbor bill. The bill to fix the time for the meeting of Congress was reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The Judiciary Committee reported adversely the House concession provisions for the election of Judges of the Supreme Court of the Territories, and it was placed upon the calendar.

Mr. Rowland, in presenting to the Senate, on the 28th ult., a memorial from manufacturers of agricultural implements in favor of a reduction of internal revenue taces, said he wished to urge on the Finance Committee the importance of the subject of reducing internal revenue taxes. He introduced the memorial of the manufacturers of agricultural implements, representing that the business of manufacturing agricultural implements had increased from a few hundred dollars annually to over $50,000,000 annually, and that the business employed over 100,000 men, and that the Fifty-first Congress, declaring that after the 1st day of July, 1888, no more internal revenue should be collected from the manufacture of agricultural implements, and that the Fifty-second Congress, at its first session, declaring that after the 1st day of July, 1887, no more internal revenue should be collected from the manufacture of agricultural implements, and that the Fifty-second Congress, at its first session, declaring that after the 1st day of July, 1886, the person named in the act should be exempt from the payment of a tax referred upon by the pension bureau of the United States, and that the Fifty-second Congress, at its last session, and it is entirely certain that the Fifty-third Congress will not allow the Fifty-second Congress to enjoy such additional benefits." The President also vetoed a bill for the relief of Mrs. Sumner, whose husband was a small contractor in Minnesota in 1861. The claimant's husband was a contractor for supplies to the Indians, and it was a well-established presumption that the claim is entirely fictitious. It was said in the Senate that the President had to be Consul at Munich. The House of Representatives passed the Senate bill authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Signal Corps on the bill making an annual appropriation for the Signal Corps, and for other purposes.

Two bill exciting the Bluffs of the Yellowstone National Park on some one of the adjoining streams for by two miles on the north, and by two miles on the 15th inst. The Senate by a vote of 23 to 20, passed the bill to provide for special orders the Judiciary Committee adopted a report in favor of the bill to provide for the relief of Mrs. Logan. The House passed a notice that the measure must be voted on the 15th inst. The House of Representatives passed the House of Representatives passed a bill to provide for the appointment of a Secretary of the Interior, and the Senate Committee on Finance, the portofolio of Secretary of the Interior, the House bill to provide for the relief of Mrs. Logan, the House bill to provide for the relief of the widow of Gen. Sherman, the House bill to provide for the relief of the widow of Gen. Sherman, the House bill to provide for the relief of the widow of Gen. Sherman

Railroad Notes.

The D. C. & E. R. R., while still to great extent on paper, bids fair to become a reality in the near future, and citizens of Kalkaska are pulling together and straining every nerve to have the road come this way, and with a fair prospect of success. The committee which visited Charlevoix and Bellaire last week were well received, and their statements as to the advantages of the route via. Kalkaska, evidently had a good effect. Upon the return of our committee the B. M. Association of this place decided to send our county surveyor Mr. Mosher, and a Mr. Teed, a Cadillac surveyor, over the proposed route from here to Bellaire and these gentlemen will be met en route by a party working this way from Bellaire, and their report will soon be made. In the mean time a part of the business committee of the Business Men's Association have gone to Grayling, the eastern terminus of the route, to see how matters stand there. A. Bloomy and Alf. G. Drake are the members of said committee who have gone to Grayling, and they were accompanied by O. C. Goodrich and W. B. Perkins. This road will be built, and if it comes our way, of which we are now hopeful, will give us the advantages of a competing and direct line to the east, and be of immense benefit to both village and county.—Kalkaska Leader.

Still the railroad boom keeps up, and the air of Grand Traverse regions is full of shifting, changing railroad lines. Kalkaska seems to have got the lead a little for the crossing, and Mancelona jumps up again and spits on her hands and goes in once more. East Jordan has dropped one line and picked up another one that has promised her the terminus to run from Alba. Now, gentlemen, let us draw a line and you will all tumble to its superior advantage. Starting at Vanderbilt, running by Branch Lake and How's Creek to Boyne Falls, thence west by Deer Lake and Deer Creek to East Jordan, thence northwest to Ironton and Charlevoix. You can reach Charlevoix this way with just forty miles of railroad with little or no grade. We have been over the route and know what we say. The road can be built and operated with one-third less money than via Kalkaska, Mancelona or Alba. Boyne Falls has got her weather eye open and will waylay the first railroad she catches trying to sneak by.—Boyne Falls Gazette.

At the last monthly meeting of the business men's association held Tuesday evening last, the railroad matter was discussed. Charlevoix wants a railroad, and is bound to have it, and it was thought that if business men here would interview Charlevoix people, that a profitable route could probably be opened up from here to the latter mentioned place. The meeting concluded to appoint a committee for the purpose of visiting Charlevoix, which is as follows: T. T. Bates, Geo. E. Steele, F. Hamilton.—Traverse Journal.

At the regular meeting of the stockholders of the D. C. & E. R. R. on Monday afternoon, the following named gentlemen were elected a board of directors: R. M. Cherrie, S. G. Isaman, F. J. Meech, A. D. Cruickshank, L. D. Bartholomew, G. W. Crouter, John Nicholls, J. Milo Eaton, D. C. Nettleton, E. H. Green, E. A. Lewis. At an adjourned meeting on Wednesday R. M. Cherrie was elected president.

In a recent visit to New York, Mr. R. M. Cherrie received assurances that the necessary capital would be furnished to build, equip and operate the railroad from Charlevoix to Grayling, if the company decided to build and operate themselves. We understand unofficially, that they will first offer to lease it to the Michigan Central, and if not accepted, then they will handle it themselves.

While the scheme proposed by our Traverse City neighbors is a good one, we believe the connection with the Michigan Central at Grayling is better, because it gives us direct connections with Detroit and the east, and by reason of crossing the G. R. & I., we have just as direct connection with Chicago and the west as we would have via. Traverse City.

Charlevoix has got to the point where she proposes to have an outlet by rail as well as by water. Sensible conclusion. And Kalkaska hopes to convince the towns along the proposed line that right here is the spot to cross the G. R. & I., with as pretty a route through from here to Grayling, as the sun ever shone on.—Kalkaska Leader.

Mancelona wants the proposed Grayling & Charlevoix railroad to come that way while Alba is in a similar mood. As it cannot well reach both there is promise of considerable strife. Both towns offer an easy route for the road and it only remains to be seen which will come down with the most cash.—Cheboygan Tribune.

The Mancelona committee did not arrive yesterday as was expected.

Comments on the Prohibitory Amendment.

Bay City is frightened over the prohibitory amendment. She has just put in an electric light system and depends upon whisky to pay for it. The taxpayers would have to pay $80,000 a year more taxes if the amendment passed.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The prohibition amendment will on election day resolve itself into the following proposition: Whisky and Tax—Free Whisky, and No Tax.—Big Rapids Herald.

The assertion of the Lansing Republican that the democratic party "stands pledged by its organs and its representatives" to vote against prohibition has no foundation whatever in fact; neither by its organs nor its representatives is the democratic party pledged to anything of the kind. Thus far in its history the party in this state has not made a party question of prohibition, and individual members are perfectly free to vote as they please upon it. The pretense that union in the legislature against submission was union against prohibition is one that republicans and their organs, including the Lansing republican, are estopped from making. They have bawled all the time that support of submission did not mean support of prohibition and it does not lie in their mouths to charge that opposition to prohibition. As a matter of fact it meant in the legislature opposition to republican fraud and hypocrisy, which were too transparent for two, at least, of the republican members.—Free Press.

The Fish Fight.

The recent talk and action in congress over the fishery difficulty with Canada has started the war spirit among our poets. The following are the latest:

Mother, may I go out to fish?
Yes, my English daughter;
Angle for suckers my child if you wish,
But not in American water.

We do not want to fight,
But, by Jingo, if we do,
We'll mow in all the fishing grounds,
And the whole Dominion, too.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris Texas by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley who was so helpless he could not turn in bed or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds. Trial bottles of this great discovery for consumption free at Dr. G. W. Crouter's.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Salt, druggist, Rippon, Ind., testifies: I use Bucklen's Electric Bitters, as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief. In one case, one man took six bottles, and was cured of rheumatism of 10 years standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, writes: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half a dollar a bottle at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of cough medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pope's 25 cent Cough Cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

"My little son, three years of age, was terribly afflicted with scrofula. His head was entirely covered with scrofulous sores, and he was thus of many marks of the disease. A few bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured him."—J. W. Beckett, Hymers, Ind.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal E. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent benefit. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. H. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Years ago the Traverse Herald claimed that the only successful solution of the question of the straits crossing, between Mackinaw City and St. Ignace, was a tunnel. This matter is receiving some attention now, and Mr. McMillan favors a tunnel. It would be about three miles long, and would cost $5,000,000.

Word has been received from Washington that Geo. W. Cook, of Charlevoix, was the lowest bidder on the mail route between Charlevoix and Petoskey; and Jas. Archer, of Eastport, on the route between Charlevoix and Eastport. F. J. Smith, of Petoskey, secured the route between Traverse City and Frankfort.

G. W. Crouter started Monday night to the grand encampment, I. O. O. F., to be held at Muskegon this week. He goes as representative from Charlevoix encampment, and is accompanied by his wife. Before his return he will attend the grand lodge, I. O. O. F., at Jackson next week, in the capacity of grand conductor.

By dint of much worrying the wages of the Charlevoix night watch have been brought up to pretty near a dollar a night. A dollar is a big lot of money to pay out every twenty four hours, and the business men of that town can scarcely bring their minds to do it. When fifty or a hundred thousand dollars worth of property go up in smoke some of these nights, it will seem quite so big.—Traverse Herald.

J. V. Sine, of Charlevoix, arrived in Clare on Wednesday to join his wife and spend a few days visiting with his former old friends and acquaintances here. Mr. Sine is much pleased with Charlevoix, and says that it is a delightful place in the summer time, but rather cold and disagreeable in winter. Mr. and Mrs. Sine will return home the first of the coming week.—Clare Democrat.

Thirty-six persons united with the Congregational church at Nashville last Sunday, the result of the efforts of the evangelist, Rev. C. P. Van Auken. The papers of that enterprising village speak in high terms of this revivalist, and indeed they are well warranted in so doing if he bears anything like a strong family characteristic, for he is the brother of our former popular pastor of the Congregational church here, H. H. Van Auken now of Alpena.—Eaton Rapids Journal.

The register of deeds, of Ingham county is getting up a scheme that will make some fellows whine who ought to pay taxes, but do not. The "scheme" is in the shape of an index book which will contain the name of every mortgage or assignees of mortgages in the county with a short description of the premises covered and the amount the document represents. The supervisors will look over this book before making their assessments and make note of all persons in their bailiwick holding mortgages.—Ex.

On Friday we received a call from Mr. J. H. Parker, general state agent for Chandler & Taylor, of Indianapolis, Ind., manufacturers of raw mill machinery. He has been superintending the final adjustments of the new saw mill, boiler and engine, built by Newman, Sears & Co., of East Saginaw, to Cooper Bros., and has it all ready for operation. Mr. Parker gives Joseph Beauvais a portion of the credit for the accuracy of adjustments in erecting the mill. A shingle mill is to be added to the outfit in about three weeks.

At Green's hall last night the seats were nearly all full, and an interested audience sat one hour and a quarter listening attentively to W. H. McCartney's lecture on "Grant in the Wilderness," being the first lecture of the "home course." Mr. McCartney began with the first movements of that campaign, and followed Gen. Grant's movements through the battle of the Wilderness, and up to Spotsylvania court house, interspersing the whole with personal reminiscence, and describing the evolutions of the soldiers as he saw them himself. It was during this engagement that the speaker received a bullet through one leg, and was made a prisoner. If the coming lectures are as interesting to the audience as this one, it is safe to pronounce the course a success in advance.

For some fourteen years a spring of water has been known to exist in a swail one and a half miles from the new village of Kilmaster, in Alcona county. There was nothing particularly noticable about the spring except that there were bubbles breaking its surface. The agitation on the water was supposed to be caused by the supply coming from the bowels of the earth. A few days ago J. A. Kilmaster visited the spring and by an experiment with a tin can collected what proved to be gas, it being the force that caused the bubbles in the water. By touching a match to the gas it burned readily. Mr. Kilmaster and those owning property in that vicinity are now determined to make a further investigation by boring a well near the spring.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Mr. J. H. Parker, of Grand Rapids, general agent for saw-mill machinery, expresses his intention of spending next summer in Charlevoix with his family. He is owner of a mill a few miles out of Grand Rapids, which works up a great deal of hard-wood lumber in the course of a year into various small articles. In speaking of the waste material usually found about a saw mill, he says his mill works up everything large enough to make a clothes pin, and that where he is now, he has to pay nearly double the price for his logs delivered at his mill that is paid for similar logs delivered to any mill on Pine Lake. Reasoning from this standpoint, he thinks he would be justified in moving his mill to Charlevoix, and shipping his manufactured goods instead of paying so much for the raw material. From his sojourn in Charlevoix he expects to have enough about this region to place his mill in the best possible location

Historical Society.

The meeting of the historical society at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Carlstein on last Friday night was largely attended and the program unusually interesting and varied.

The executive committee had provided for a debate on the question: Resolved, That the right of suffrage be extended to woman. The participants, E. M. Clark and Prof. Enos on the affirmative and Dr. Carlstein and R. W. Kane on the negative, all presented strong arguments, making it a hard matter for the judges to decide, so closely were the sides matched. They, however, decided that the woman should vote, and hereafter it is proper that their decision be respected.

An appropriate drama acted by several of the members of the family in the house by storm, while all of the exercises were of a superior quality.

The society will meet at the house of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Allen on the 11th inst., when Rev. A. T. Wood will present a paper on Charlemagne.

The "Roar of the Surf."

A good deal has been written about the "ceaseless roar of the surf." It's a big thing for a couple of days and nights, but after that you'll begin to wonder why people who come here expressly for that didn't stay home and hire some one to turn a coffee-mill. The old thing keeps hammering away for seven days and nights of the week, with no other purpose in view than to make a noise, and by and by everybody votes it a bore. An ocean with the best interests of the public at heart would keep still at least half the time. The average person pays in about ten minutes watching the "white maned wave" roll in. After that he wants some other performance. One wave is very much like another, all being cut from the same piece of cloth. Each one has a white mane; each one rolls in just so far, and breaks just as the one before it did.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

OUR PILGRIMAGE.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

We journey past the mile-stones on the way,
Resting a little while with each lichenous mile;
We stoop, we snatch, we laugh, we weep, we pray
A little while.

Some falter early. They are other stones,
And there are pilgrims journeying by each side,
Passing them by, we hear their sighs, their moans
A little while.

We heavily march; and we, too, reach the rest
Beyond the river, in the Happy Isle.
Forgiv'n, too, shines the twilight in the west
A little while!

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

CHAPTER I.

During the spring of 1867, I had occasion to stop for several weeks in a small town on the Mississippi. It was at a date when the fever for land speculation was at its height. There were some dozen or fifteen boarders at the same hotel in which I was stopping, most of them engaged in the traffic of real estate in and around that immediate vicinity. It was confidently predicted that the place was soon to become a thriving city, and it was a curious study to the shrewd observer to watch the maneuvers of this class of genteel swindlers, as they spread their webs and messes to catch the unwary victim. It was amusing to witness the attention paid to every new-comer who was suspected of having money and a predisposition for speculation. He was instantly beset by a swarm of anxious friends, ready to show him advantageous lots, and prove to him that nothing but their own pecuniary embarrassments could induce them to part with them. A fat old fellow, of aristocratic appearance, with a gold-headed cane and double row of chins, who occasionally charges ten-dollar bills for his accomplices when may now customer is around, being very careful at the same time to display a large number of cleverly executed one-thousand dollar counterfeits, is pointed out as a mammoth speculator, who is ready to buy up everything, but never willing, in fact, to sell anything, unless he can double or treble his money. Their asking price to the new-comer is always the standing offer they have received from him, but they have entered into a combination and are determined not to sell to him, unless he will pay them double what they would think of asking any one else. Certain lots belonging to Old Hunks and always adjoining their own are then pointed out to them, and they are advised before closing the bargain to apply to Old Hunks himself, and satisfy themselves of the truth of the assertion.

Of course the aristocratic old gentleman never thinks of asking more for less than double the price affered to some adjoining lot equally available, assures them that he is not at all anxious to sell; that the place is destined to become a city, and that before the expiration of twelve months those very lots will advance five hundred per cent, and then only keep pace with the prospective growth of the place. He always wears a white neck-tie, talks wisely about the future growth of the city, as though it were already an established fact—already incorporated, a board of officers appointed, and himself mayor—seem the star very distinctly, where only the most sanguine have discovered the nebula; and finally succeeds in effectually earbing the game for the accomplished rascal who has first started it.

Such was the exact state of speculative affairs in the little town of Greenboro at the date of my arrival. As to the town itself, it occupied a very pleasant sight, overlooking the river, and contained, independently of the hotel at which we were stopping, some eight or ten frame houses, and a few temporary shanties which were to serve till better dwellings could be erected for those who had been swindled into the purchase of lots for actual settlement.

I had been in Greenboro about a week, when a gentleman named Nixon booked himself for a few days at the Irving House. Judging from his appearance, he was a man well-to-do in the world, and not far from sixty years of age. It was soon noised about that he was in possession of a mine of money, so that he naturally became an object of great interest to those disinterested gentlemen who had previously combined against the old gentleman who talked so sanguinely about the city of Greenboro, and was now trying to buy up and monopolize every thing. But Mr. Nixon did not seem to care much about entering into land speculations.

He declared himself a private gentleman, more ambitious to see than to possess the world from which he was naturally inferred that he had more money than he well knew what to do with—saying that for the last few years, he had been much addicted to travel, and sometimes sketched for his own individual amusement.

Stopping at the hotel, at the same time, was a young man named Warner, who had previously been duped into the purchase of one of the city lots, in the vain hope of selling it in a few days at an advanced price. The venture had taken nearly every dollar he was worth, and being subsequently prostrated with the spring fever, he had found himself on recovery in such straitened circumstances that the sale of his lot had become absolutely necessary in order to pay his hotel expenses and get back to his friends in New York; but the genteel sharpers, who were in league with the landlord, could not think of paying back more than twenty dollars on a dollar, which was barely sufficient to cancel the charge which Mr. Griffith had secured against him; and the sanguine old gentleman who was always looking at the future city, had suddenly become crippled by the failure of some imaginary banking house, of colossal magnitude, by which he had lost half a million; and poor Warner could not but admire the manly fortitude with which he bore up under this overwhelming misfortune.

It only required a little reflection and nerve to get over these things," said the sanguine old gentleman, blandly; "life is but a span, and the man, when he steps out of this mundane sphere, can take his carpet bag along with him."

"Alas!" cried the young man, "I don't know what I shall do!" And though he struggled hard to keep them down, I could see the tears crowding into his eyes.

His emotions seemed, very strangely, to have awakened some latent pity in the placid bosom of the sanguine old gentleman, for, after gazing at the victim for a moment, he said hastily, and not without feeling:

"Try Nixon; they have all tried him. He don't want the land more than a cat wants water, but he might be induced to take yours out of city. I am deeply sorry for this untoward event, which prevents me, just now, from doing it myself. Nothing would suit me better than to do it, I assure you."

"I will try him," said the young man, suddenly brightening up. "Where is he?"

"I saw him going toward the bluffs with his sketch-book," said Griffith, rising up from his seat behind the bar and bending his cold, glassy eyes in that direction. "Since dinner I saw him."

A few minutes after we saw Warner walking hastily off in the direction indicated. He was absent an hour as I could judge, about an hour.

When he returned he chanced to be one in the barroom but Griffith and myself. The gloomy, disconraged look which he had worn on starting was gone, and now give place to a healthy, hopeful expression that must have been noticed even by a stranger, much more by those who were in the habit of seeing him every hour in the day.

"I have sold him my lot," were his first words on entering; "and I tell you what, he carries 'rags' enough in his pocket to buy out every land swindler in Greenboro, and pay for him in clear cash. You should have seen the roll of bills he drew from a fold pocket in his coat when he came to pay me."

"Did he pay you before you gave him a deed?" queried Griffith, with that practical sagacity which is always associated with minds of this caliber.

"Yes. He didn't want the land; he told me so. He said I had swindled—let down easy, I suppose, he didn't say that—but he bought the lot because he pitied me, and felt for it because he didn't regard it of much account, any, now."

"A very accommodating gentleman, truly," sneered Griffith, addressing the assembled swindlers. Why didn't he give you the money, and let you keep on the lot, if, as you say, he didn't regard it of any account?"

"That's none of your business, nor mine," said Warner, briefly terminating the argument. "It is enough for you that I have money to pay my expenses out and give to-morrow morning, if you ever catch me in the city of Greenboro again, you are at liberty to skin me."

"I fancy they had come for me!" he said, smilingly.

"Not yet," I answered, hopefully. "We may have some days yet, unnerved by the sentence."

"And is the time?" he demanded.

I crew out my watch and pointed to the hand. It wanted just one hour yet of the appointed time.

"What is the use in hoping?" he said. "They meant to hang me from the first, and they will do it. But I'll not go like an ox to the shambles. They shall drag me there, and I shall force them to mount the scaffold, and there I'll resist them to the death."

I desired to know if he had no hope for his friends.

"No," he answered. "I pray to God the news may never reach them. It is better that they should not know my fate, than that the knowledge should carry them to the suspicion of my guilt."

The scaffold had been erected the day before in the little square in front of the county jail, and about noon in the morning the crowd had been steadily pouring in from every quarter, for miles around, all eager to witness the violent death of a human creature, some more kindly, perhaps, finally organized than themselves, and, probably, much less fearful than they, to commit the hideous crime of which he had been convicted.

Already the crowd had become impatient, and clamorous for the sight of the prisoner; were beginning to swell the air and penetrate the walls of the prison. The burial element was now fairly aroused.

There was no mistaking the purport of that warning cry.

The prisoner understood it, shivered, turned paler yet, and shaded his eyes, as if possible—and sunk helplessly on the rude wooden chair in which served the purpose of a bed.

"The bloodhounds have scented me," he whispered through his pale lips. "They are out a few moments left to me. I feel it, and I feel it already. I wish I might die quietly here where I am. You have been a good friend to me; promise that you will stand by me to the last."

He grasped my arm hard as he spoke, and I gave him the desired promise. This seemed to give him a little momentary strength.

"I dread the heartless ruffians outside, lest they have come to see me murdered. I know they would relt me with stones and rotten missiles unless some true friend stood by me. For the love of God, don't let them in a moment sooner than it is all over! You are my friend—take what money I have left, claim my poor body the moment the Sheriff will allow you, and see that it is properly interred."

He was choking with emotion, and could only reply with an earnest hand-pressure. In a few moments the roar of the crowd grew more and more impatient. The ominous few. Louder and louder grew the clamorous shouts of the multitude. The hour appointed for the execution, and the fatal minute. There was the hurried tramp of feet in the passage, and the next moment we heard the key turn in the lock. The poor young man drew back with a ghastly groan, and lifted his hands with a glare of his eyes that his mind was fast unsettling. His poor, attenuated body seemed to shrink up within itself.

"They have come for me! Ha! ha! they have come for me!" were his words.

In another moment the door had entered followed by the Sheriff, and one or two of his deputies.

"Come, Warner," said the turnkey, in a half gruff, half soothing tone, "it's time. Now, show your courage, man, and don't mind down. You do not suppose there's no chance there is no use struggling, do you? Come, be a man and play it out with a high hand. Ten thousand chances to one there will be some you if you don't break down."

"Shut off," shouted Warner, suddenly rousing himself up, and glaring at the turnkey as he approached. "I'm no coward, as that fool would be arrayed against him in evidence of my guilt."

He was still feeble from the effects of his recent illness, and fear wrought up his imagination to the highest pitch.

"I know they mistrust me, from sneering bloodhounds, if they can but find the shadow of a pretext for doing it; yet God knows I have not the strength to kill a man if I had the disposition."

I told him I believed him innocent, and would stand by him to the last; and the sanguine old gentleman, who was standing near, promised to do the same.

With the Coroner came the Sheriff, and after the verdict, which was that Nixon came to his death from blows dealt upon the head by some person or persons to them unknown, Warner was taken into custody and carried to a town about twenty miles farther down, where he was locked in jail to await his trial at the next term of the county court, which would sit in about a week.

At the proper time the case came up, but in spite of all we could do, the jury found a verdict of guilty—chiefly on the ground that the prisoner was the last person known to be in company with the murdered man. He was accordingly sentenced to be executed outside the jail-yard in just three weeks from the day of the trial. I will not attempt to depict the agony and excitement of the prisoner on becoming fully conscious of the awful doom that so suddenly fell upon him.

The several inmates of the hotel who had not gone with the party on the search, were astounded at the intelligence that some discovery had been made, had now gathered on the veranda in eager expectation.

They were not, however, kept long in suspense, for the sun was yet in the meridian when Warner, with some six or seven men, who had evidently organized than themselves, and, probably, much less fearful than they, to commit the hideous crime of which he had been convicted.

Already the crowd had become impatient, and clamorous for the sight of the prisoner; were beginning to swell the air and penetrate the walls of the prison. The burial element was now fairly aroused.

There was no mistaking the purport of that warning cry.

The prisoner understood it, shivered, turned paler yet, and shaded his eyes, as if possible—and sunk helplessly on the rude wooden chair which served the purpose of a bed.

"The bloodhounds have scented me," he whispered through his pale lips. "They are out a few moments left to me. I feel it, and I feel it already. I wish I might die quietly here where I am. You have been a good friend to me; promise that you will stand by me to the last."

He grasped my arm hard as he spoke, and I gave him the desired promise. This seemed to give him a little momentary strength.

"I dread the heartless ruffians outside, lest they have come to see me murdered. I know they would pelt me with stones and rotten missiles unless some true friend stood by me. For the love of God, don't let them in a moment sooner than it is all over! You are my friend—take what money I have left, claim my poor body the moment the Sheriff will allow you, and see that it is properly interred."

"Yes—and relatives," interposed one, only reply with an earnest hand-pressure.

In a few moments the rest of the party appeared bearing the remains of the unfortunate Nixon. Lead had evidently satisfied us that the skull had been fractured in three places, but upon being no coroner as yet in the city of Greenboro one of the men had to be dispatched to the next town to procure one.

I saw Griffith take the man aside and instruct him to procure a warrant for the arrest of Warner, and place it in the hands of the Deputy Sheriff, who resided in the same town. He was the last man known to be with him," said he, "and, from his own admission, he brought back money. Let him disentangle himself from the chain of circumstances if he can. I am sure I hope he can!"

As for myself, I did not think Warner was any more guilty of the murder than I was, and the moment I could do so I acquainted him with my opinion.

"My God!" he exclaimed, "what shall I do?"

He was as pale as a ghost. I never saw a man so completely unnerved. It was plain in my life.

I advised him to stay and run the risk of a trial. There was no other alternative; for flight would be ruin. Even if he succeeded in escaping, he would be arrayed against his in evidence of guilt.

He was still feeble from the effects of his recent illness, and fear wrought up his imagination to the highest pitch.

"I know they mistrust me, from sneering bloodhounds, if they can but find the shadow of a pretext for doing it; yet God knows I have not the strength to kill a man if I had the disposition."

I told him I believed him innocent, and would stand by him to the last; and the sanguine old gentleman, who was standing near, promised to do the same.

"A COUNTRY parson," in encouraging a storm the past season is the year across the Atlantic, was reminded of the following: A clergyman was so unfortunate as to be caught in a severe gale in his voyage out. The water was exceedingly rough, and the ship persistently buried her nose in the sea. The rolling was constant, and at last the good man got thoroughly frightened. He believed they were destined for a watery grave. He asked the captain if he could not have prayers. The captain took him by the arm and led him down to the forecastle, where the men were singing and swearing. "There," said he, "when you hear them swearing you may know there is no danger." He went back feeling better; but the storm increased his alarm. He slept, however, and best Wednesday staggered to the forecastle again. "The ancient mariners were swearing as ever. "Mary," he said to his sympathetic wife, as he crawled into his berth after tacking across a wet deck, "Mary, thank God, they're swearing yet."—Harper's Magazine.

Talk About Kicking.

"Well, I inquired a base-ball manager of an umpire, "have you reconsidered your determination to leave the game to its fate next season?"

"I have," was the reply.

"What induced the reconsideration—the crowded condition of other competitions?"

"Oh, no. You remember I told you I'd stick to the 'game' if I found any other game in which there was as much kicking as in base-ball?"

"Yes."

"Well, I've found it. I saw a game of foot ball the other day, and it's all kicking."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

INJUSTICE CORRECTED.

Important.

Convincing Verification of Wildcast Public Statements.

In common with many publishers and editors, we have been accustomed to look upon the claims statements made we have run in our columns as merely aimed advertising.

Consequently we feel justified in taking the liberty of printing a few points from a private letter received from one of our largest publishers, and a sort of confession of fault to our readers. We quote:

"We have convinced ourselves that by telling what we know to be true, we have produced at least a permanent conviction in the public mind. Seven years ago we stand what the national disease of this country was, and that it was rapidly increasing. Three years ago we stated that a marked check had been given to it.

The statistics of one of the largest life-insurance companies in the country now show that the tide has turned, and that the disease, which was proceeding from the river, as it was called, which led through an immediate village called Fleshmar, to Greenboro.

This road, for more than a mile, was as straight as an arrow, and at its furthermost extremity a single horseman was seen flying toward them with the speed of the wind. The day was remarkably still, and every eye, even to the horses, saw and heard in that direction.

On came the horseman, shouting and waving his hand at every leap of the flying steed. His words were yet too inarticulate, but that he was the bearer of some important message affecting the prisoner, could not be doubted, and the inference of itself was sufficient to retard the fatal proceedings.

At length the words were distinguished:

"Stop the execution! Stop the execution!"

It was taken up by the multitude, and in a twinkling the cry was in the real case of life, and takes of paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, convulsions, epilepsy, consumption, and a second glance, as he dashed through the open space, the form of the scaffold, showed me, in the flushed and most-beaptivated figure, the young old gentleman, the mammoth speculator, the one-horse-fair-and-square-of-the city of Greenboro, Nehemiah Hinks.

"Cut the prisoner at liberty!" he shouted. "Another man has confessed it not two hours since, on his death-bed—William Griffith, of the Irving House."

Warner moved not. He was deaf to the old gentleman's inspiring words. He was dead to the welcome shout that for one single instant seemed to send the heavens in transport. He was still hanging like a dead weight on the arms of the two deputies who supported him. The noose was fitted from his neck, the cap raised from his brow, and—it was too late! they saw only the face of a corpse. The terror and excitement of the moment had destroyed him, innocent though he was.

He Was Married.

Customer—"Have you any canned corned beef?"

Country grocer—"Best kind, Mr. Blank. Anything else?"

"Any canned tongue, already boiled?"

"Yes."

"Good chicken, already cooked?"

"Yes."

"Let's see. They don't put up broiled beefsteaks, do they."

"No, no."

"Or roast beef?"

"No."

"By the way, what are these? look like potatoes."

"That's what they are—Saratoga chips.

"Well, I'll take a bushel of them. Hello! What's that?"

"Canned scalloped corned beef hash."

"Just the thing. Gimme a lot of it. Got any baked beans?"

"Plenty. Baked beans; three different brands."

"Let's see what else there is here. How are these used?"

"These are soup essences, and need nothing but thinning with water."

"Well, I'll try those, and throw in a lot of other things you think good, no matter what, only so they're cooked. I'm tired of eating."

"Is your mother sick, Mr. Blank?"

"No, she's well, but I don't live with her now. I'm married."—Omaha World.

Disposing of the Dead!

This is not a question for the church to settle. It is not one that the state can settle. The final words of spiritual and temporal authority may be spoken as well above a body in the chapel of a crematory as over one lying at the lonely graveyard of a ship at sea, or upon a bier beside a grave. It is not a question of what is right or wrong, and it will be a mistake if the church attempts to make it so, even in appearance. It is simply a matter of the human will. If mankind will have burial, they will have it; if cremation, then cremation it must be. Human will, about a thing of this kind, means public opinion. So long as the many demand burial the minority of one will have to be consulted; but when the world at large decides cremation, burial may become a thing of the past, and Christianity never will either method be the universal rule. In some places mankind will bury, and in others will burn the dead. But this will pay what has been not affect the growth of Christianity one way or the other. The future of the soul can never depend upon the future of the body, and it is the soul that Christianity would save.—North American Review.

A Difference.

A marked illustration of the value of old records and the failure of memory is shown in General Colley's preparation for trial of the schooner Dolphin case before the United States Court of Admiralty under the French spoliation act. The tradition and united testimony of the heirs of the owners was that the vessel was loaded with "coffee," while the attested copy of the original protest procured by General Colley, made Feb. 5, 1798, shows the cargo to have been "rum."—*Rockland (Me.) Mrs. A. N. Moffat assistant, national and state superintendent department soldiers and sailors, of the W. C. T. U., spoke to the soldiers at the Home at Grand Rapids, Sunday afternoon. She said: "Welcome in the name of the women of Michigan to the Home. We as a union have organized this department through which it is my pleasure to represent the veterans of the country 200,000 women who were loyal women and who love your "Rally Round the Flag" as well as you. My early womanhood was developed during the years which tried this nation as with fire and when my brother, a member of the twentieth Michigan Infantry, came home to die, a sense of the price of peace came over me which has never been forgotten. My interest in veterans is not all official but personal, for I would honor the memory of my dead soldier brother by kind and loving ministering to those of you who remain. Again greeting in the name of the noble organization I represent, a tribute of honor for the battle you fought for us and our homes. We are now at the last to forget you and we wish to be among the first to bear you the homage of loyal hearts. Now we bring to you a plea for signatures to the total abstinence pledge. I have two autograph albums filled with veterans' names which are not only pledges not to taste, not to handle intoxicants, but of appreciation of the services of our department among your comrades. In that day when shall draw the sword of the enemy in an eternal victory, the blue and grey, and grey and blue, will stand shoulder to shoulder with one God, one country, one flag—one for every best interest of this Union.—Telegram Herald.

The annual convention of Virginia W. C. T. U., in session in Alexandria, Jan. 25 and 26, passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That our heartfelt thanks are hereby tendered to Mrs. Frances E. The Portland Oregonian relates a story of a portly and jolly government official who went out of his office one day last week without his cane. "Oh!" said he, "I must go back. That is bad luck." So to avert the threatened evil he marched back into the office, sat down, took a half dollar from his pocket, laid it upon his desk, turned it over, and then replaced it in his pocket. He then took his cane and marched out with a cheerful heart. Of course, he did not believe in this hocus-pocus business, but then he had heard the omen all his life, and it could do no harm to go through the rigmarole, so he went through it.

A great summer hotel near New York is tenanted by a solitary watchman. Once in a while the watchman goes up to the desk, asks if there are any letters, snubs himself, follows an imaginary bellboy up eight flights of stairs, brings himself a very small pitcher of ice-water and gives himself a dollar bill, sits down to a large plate with an oyster cracker on it, and feels he is really away for the summer.—Boston Transcript.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of disease and diseases. Any little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nervous energies are exhausted, and headache and a hundred other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of modern man and woman kind might be cured and prevented were their approach heeded and resisted, having their origin in derangements of the liver and blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness and other nauseous conditions. Evils of a diseased nature find a certain cure by the use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine, nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and D. G. W. Crouter.

IT IS WONDERFUL

how easily rheumatism begins, and how insidiously it grows in the system, until one is startled to find himself a victim in either the acute or chronic form. He then learns the fearful tenacity of its grip and the utter powerlessness of the ordinary remedies have relied on.

Probably no to disease have physicians given more study, and none has more completely baffled their efforts to provide a specific; and until Athlophoros was discovered there was no medicine which would surely cure rheumatism, neuralgia and nervous or sick headache. The testimonials like the following prove beyond question that Athlophoros is the only reliable remedy, and that it will do all that is claimed for it.

East Saginaw, Mich.

About four weeks ago I was taken with a severe attack of rheumatism. My feet were so swollen that I could not wear my boots to walk, I could just hobble about and got very little sleep at night, as I suffered intense pain whether I sat up or laid down. I went out and bought a pair of crutches to use in my to get around. After buying them, when on my way home, I stopped in at W. R. Moore's drug store, and noticing Athlophoros for sale I decided to try a bottle. After taking half a bottle I laid my crutches aside, only using them the one time—on my way home. The swelling is all reduced, and I now wear my boots with perfect ease. I have not had any pain since. I would not take $20 for the balance of the bottle if I could not get more. Any one suffering with rheumatism need not suffer any longer if they will take Athlophoros. JEN GRINWARE.

The Great Pioneer Newspaper.

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan is enjoyed by The Detroit Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of the Free Press is the history of Michigan. Published while this commonwealth was yet a Territory, The Free Press was recognized as a power in the land at the time of her admission into the sisterhood of states. From that day to this, the energies of the paper have always been directed to, and identified with, the advancement of the state's best interest; it has grown with its growth and shared in its prosperity.

It is no wonder that The Free Press claims the right to add to the glory of being the oldest, the even more honorable title of being THE NEWS paper—the best for the Merchant, Mechanic, Farmer, the best for the Family, and, when quantity and quality of matter is considered, beyond question THE CHEAPEST.

In its Daily is published in compact readable form, in addition to its own special dispatches, all the Associated Press News, Quotations of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and State News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current Literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, a paper Daily, at 16 to 18 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is 15 cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 60 cents a month or $7 a year.

THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS.

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the weekly edition, a fifty-six column paper—being full of magazine and newspaper reading matter, crisp, clean, interesting and instructive. ORIGINAL STORIES, both short and continued; TOPICS OF THE TIMES; THE HOUSEHOLD, conducted by some readers; LETTER BOX AND PUZZLERS; POINTED EDITORIAL COMMENT; SPECIAL ARTICLES on thousands of subjects, and a complete summary of the news of the week are among its attractions. It numbers among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known authors and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is enormous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per week. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. Price, ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.

Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

☞ Subscribers to the JOURNAL can have the Weekly Free Press and JOURNAL together for two dollars per year, cash in advance. By this arrangement you are saved the trouble and cost of the remittance and get the JOURNAL for one dollar a year.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Z. Mills Eaton and Mary J. Eaton, his wife, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Mary J. Sweetland, of the same place, bearing date the twenty-second day of March, A. D. 1886, and recorded in the office of the register of deeds, for the county of Charlevoix and state of Michigan, on the twenty-ninth day of March, A. D. 1886, in liber "H" of mortgages, on page 466, at six o'clock in the afternoon, and the same is now owned by the said Mary J. Sweetland; and whereas default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage, by reason of default being made, A. D. 1886, and whereas, in and by the conditions of said mortgage, it was provided that should any default be made in the payment of any installment of principal, or of any part thereof on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain unpaid for the space of ninety days, then and the principal sum together with all arrearages of interest thereon shall, at the option of the said obligee or her assigns, become due and payable immediately thereafter; and whereas default has been made in the payment of the installment of principal and interest due on the day when the same became payable, and said installment and interest has remained unpaid and in arrears, for the space of over ninety days, the said Mary J. Sweetland, mortgagee, does hereby declare it her option and does hereby elect that the principal sum secured by said mortgage and all interest thereon, become now due and payable, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative; and whereas there is now claimed to be due on said mortgage and the notes secured by said mortgage, and the notes mentioned and described in said notice, the sum of Two Thousand Seven Hundred and Twenty-One Dollars, ($2,721) principal and interest, and no suit or proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the aforesaid sum or any part thereof, and the said mortgagee, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, will foreclose said mortgage and sell the premises therein mortgaged, to the highest bidder, at public auction, on Friday, the 17th day of June, A. D. 1887, at one o'clock in the afternoon of said day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the house of the court house, in the village of Boyne City, in said county, (the place where the circuit court for the circuit court for Charlevoix county is holden) of so much of said mortgaged premises as may be sufficient to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage with the costs and charges of sale and all legal costs, and any such allotment be provided for in said mortgage, which said premises are described in the said mortgage as follows, to wit: All of those certain pieces or parcels of land, situate and being in the township of Charlevoix, county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, viz: Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, of J. Mills Eaton's Addition to the village of Charlevoix, according to the recorded plat thereof; and the right, title and interest of the said mortgagee, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining or thereunto appertaining.

Washington's birthday next Tuesday.

Look upwards; but at the same time look where you are going.

School in the Freeman district commences April 4th. Teacher not yet engaged.

Mr. Driggers, of Wayne, who is staying with his brother-in-law, Mr. Gilbert Parish, for a short time, reports lots of sand in Wayne.

The good sleighing grows better.

Everybody seems busy at furnace wood this winter.

We make out to hear the whistle of the small mill at Dwight's Landing, which sounds natural since they started up on the 6th. Mr. Foreman reports not many logs being got out around the lakes.

St. Valentine's day last Monday, but no one remembered your reporter.

Monday night, Feb. 6th, a shanty belonging to Mr. Lane's place in the ground on Mr. Lane's place. On Monday some of the Indians went to East Jordan, and when they arrived at the shanty at night full of skit-tedness, they made so much racket that the rest of their fellow travelers were compelled to leave the shanty and shelter in another shanty, where they returned in the morning no shanty was visible. None of the Indians are now injured by the fire.

One of our enterprising farmers said to us the other day that he was going to farming next summer, so he could sit in the house next winter, and knock his wife and smoke his pipe. That's right, Charlie; there's nothing like being industrious.

Boyne City.

From the Citizen.

Geo. Bailey is getting out 300,000 feet of logs this season.

Circuit court convenes at Boyne City on the 22d of this month.

Vance's mill, on the state road, is sawing about 10,000 feet per day.

Dell Halladay, while chopping in the woods near the village, was struck by a falling limb the other day, and nearly lost an eye in consequence, besides being severly bruised.

During the late railroad survey to Vanderbilt it was ascertained that the approximate elevation of Boyne Falls above Boyne City was 99 ft., of Chambers' hill, 558 ft.; Hugh's hill, 712 ft.; Tannah Lake, 504 ft.; and Vanderbilt 450 ft.

From our own Correspondent.

The lowest the thermometer has registered here this winter was 27 degrees below zero.

This end of Pine Lake is being surrounded with logs very rapidly. This is fine winter weather and the laboring men are as busy as bees in buckwheat time.

Mr. Hammond, who had both feet frozen so badly sometime since, had them both amputated at the instep about a week ago. He is doing as well as could be expected.

Henry A. Jersey, who removed from Boyne to Chicago last spring was shaking hands with old friends on our streets again a to-day. The pork-packing metropolis seems to have agreed with him as far as can be discerned.

Strong prospects of a toboggan slide here soon.

C. G. Lewis, clothier, Tuesday assigned to H. L. Page.

The Pine Lake Lumber Co., started their small mill Monday.

We understand the co-operative store will soon commence operations.

Last Saturday morning Al Draper came into our office wearing a smile big enough for a dozen men of his size. On inquiring we learned that it was all on account of an eight pound boy who put in an appearance at his house and Al says he is a dandy.

D. C. Loveday received a letter from Capt. Vandeboyer of the Priant, Tuesday, stating that he had made arrangements with the owners of the Lon. A. Cummings to run in connection with the Priant the coming season. They will run opposite, one leaving here, and the other Harbor Spring every morning. Capt. Vandeboyer will be here soon to complete his arrangements for the season.

Nickerson & Co., the bankrupt shipping merchants of Boston, owe $2,000,000, of which but $80,000 is secured.

Three men walking on the railroad track at Hyde Park, Mass., were killed by the Providence express train.

John De Leon, of New York, who styles himself an astrologer, recently convicted of kidnapping young girls to ship to Panama, has been sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment at Sing Sing of hard labor.

An express train on the Vermont Central Road was thrown into White River at Woodstock, Vt., by a broken rail near the bridge. Four coaches filled with people went down fifty feet and at once took fire. Nearly fifty persons lost their lives. Among them were Frank Wesson, of Springfield, Mass., and Edward F. Dillon, of Springfield, Vt.

The Harmony Rolling Mills, at Lawrence, N. J., valued at $250,000, were badly damaged by fire.

In the revival meetings now in progress in the New Dr. Talmage's church at Brooklyn 2,000 persons have already been converted.

Goldsmith Brothers, manufacturers of clothing at Philadelphia, have failed for $150,000.

The Dennison Paper Company, of Mechanic Falls, Me., have failed, with liabilities of about $65,000, due principally in Boston.

In regard to the horrible accident on the Vermont Central Railroad, a dispatch from White River Junction, Vt., says:

Prof. Fletcher, Chief of the Engineering Department of Dartmouth College, who made a close examination of the track leading to the bridge, says there were three rails torn up, and that where the car Pilgrim probably left the track, these rails show signs of defects in the material. The ends of the rails, he says, show that an axle on the car Pilgrim broke, causing its derailment, and that the car and only car which left the track until the bridge was reached. One of the bodies recovered is that of a young woman, alleging that it is the body of a female and the other that it is that of a male. Even the sex of some is not divulged on the question of the account of the charred condition of the corpse. Clothing, fragments of which are found, belonging to each of the victims were burned, the remains in such a manner as to indicate that they were burned together and that one body was entirely consumed. There is nothing left of the other but a portion of the trunk, minus the head, arms and legs.

Judge Barber, of Cincinnati, says the Spies-Van Zandt affair was a legal marriage.

Subscriptions to the Hendricks monument fund in Indiana are coming in at the rate of $80 a month.

Several distinct shocks of earthquake were experienced throughout Central Illinois and Indiana early on the morning of the 6th inst. A heavy rumbling noise was heard at first, followed by several violent vibrations of the earth, shaking houses, rattling windows and doors, and causing a panic among the terrified hordes. At Springfield, Ill., the citizens were aroused by the rattle of crockery, windows, pictures, and at one house, where the people were up attending the wants of a sick person, the swaying was so distinct as to cause alarm, and the invalid removed from her bed during the night air and placed as near mother earth as possible. At another place the glass doors of the wardrobe were thrown violently open, and the case tottered as if to fall. At about the hour those shocks were felt in Indiana and Illinois the people of Owatonna, Minn., were startled by thunder and lightning lasting an hour, with the mercury below zero.

Henry Clay Dean, a noted Democratic campaigner, formerly of Iowa, died in Putnam County, Missouri, last week.

In a wrestling-match at Chicago between Joe Acton, the social champion, and Evan Lewis, of Wisconsin, known as "the stranger," the former won three falls to the latter's one. Four thousand spectators witnessed the contest, which was a determined and desperate one, yet not the brilliant from the following description of the fourth and last round:

The fourth, and, as it proved, the last bout began like an early-round in a hard-fought prize-fight. Lewis was ugly. He rushed at Acton like a bull-dog, and the latter, raised his high sleeve his head, the time champion clinched in vain for a safety hold on the neck of the big fellow. For an instant Lewis seemed like an Atlas who had lifted the world upon his bloody prize-fights and laughed over the edge of chaos. The crowd saw the danger, the element while other men lean backward shuddered. The next instant Lewis hurled his opponent from his feet as if Acton were a sack of potatoes. As he went toward the floor Lewis caught his adversary by the hands and bounced him with a crash which jarred the platform. The shock of spectators followed was so intense as to interrupt of Acton's facility as of Lewis's strength. Lewis was on top of the fallen champion, and he strived. The little man struggled about his by a clever dodge, got behind Lewis, and, before he knew it, was in the grip of the strong man, who had lost, but no nonsense were the men facing each other now. Lewis was born Acton to the floor. For the next time during the struggle he got his fairly on his back, and he was down to stay. Every muscle in this massive giant and every man yelled at once: "Hes got him now. Lewis can!" Lewis was sure gritter in his eyes and he got to fighting his hold. When the referee announced the fall and every one by pantin engaged with no cause and Lewis caused a shower of applause. Twice more Lewis tried Acton to the floor, but, belonging to each of the times, was but bootlike. Acton made a move which at first seemed to give the strong man hold and before anyone could realize it Lewis was on his back, and Acton dropped to the winner of the contest.

A deputy sergeant-at-arms of the United States Senate has been sent to Texas with a list of twenty-five witnesses who are to be subpoenaed in connection with the alleged political outrage which the Committee on Privileges and Elections is directed to investigate.

Of the 140 clerks in the office of the Chief Signal officer, 123 have signed a petition to Congress expressing the opinion that the best interests of the Government would be subserved by transferring the signal corps of the army to the new Executive Department contemplated in House bill No. 5790, and also urging that they be made civilians instead of enlisted men as at present.

The Secretary of the Interior reports to the Senate that forty-four of the older Apache children at Fort Marion have been transferred to the Indian school at Carlisle, that some of the younger ones are to be educated at St. Augustine by the Sisters of Charity at $7.50 each per quarter.

The Commissioner of Agriculture has sent to Professor Webster, of Purdue University, to the swamps of Mississippi and Louisiana to study the habits of the bull-frog.

The Secretary of War, in a communication to Congress, reports the organized militia of the United States at 7,059,982 men. It appears that Arkansas, Oregon, Tennessee and Mississippi have no organized forces.

Secretary Manning has sent to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs a long reply to the request of that committee for his views with regard to the House and Senate resolution bills, and for any suggestions that he may desire to make with reference thereto. The Secretary regards that the tariff laws of the United States or the non-intercourse policy of Canada should be the "divided disgrace of our common civilization." He cautions legislators to exact laws looking forward to the eventual merging of the two countries into one, and submits a new bill to the committee which provides that whenever the President shall be satisfied that British vessels are denied any of their rights or privileges in the waters or ports, it shall, in his discretion, be his duty to issue a proclamation closing the ports of the United States against vessels owned wholly or in part by a subject of her Brittanic Majesty, and coming or arriving from any point or place in the Dominion of Canada or in the Island of Newfoundland, whether directly or having touched at any other port, excepting such vessels as shall be in distress; and every vessel this excluded that shall enter or attempt to enter any port of the United States shall be seized and forfeited, or the value thereof shall be recovered from the person attempting to make the entry.

POLITICAL.

The Legislature of New Mexico has passed an act providing for the strict quarantine of stock from other States and Territories.

Both houses of the Colorado Legislature have passed a resolution requesting Congress to pass laws placing in the hands of competent Federal agents full power to extirpate contagious disease among the cattle, with an appropriation of $1,000,000 to defray the cost.

An Indianapolis dispatch says "the Republicans have abandoned the Senatorial struggle in the Legislature, and will content themselves with a contest in the United States Senate. Senator Sayers will refuse to sign Turpie's certificate of election, and Secretary of State Griffin will refuse to attest it. The House journal will show that the presiding officer of the convention, Mr. Sayre, declared that there was no election, and a joint committee will present a memorial alleging that the election was illegal. On this the Republicans will make their case."

Cassius M. Clay has called the attention of President Cleveland to a published report that a company of Americans are on the way to our shores, and he gives warning of the escapes to be expected. The matter was referred to the Treasury Department, and will be submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means.

President Cleveland has signed the bill to provide for the support of the Soldiers' Home. The signing of the bill by the President was in direct opposition to the opinion of Attorney General Garland, and it is very well understood he has acted against the views of the Cabinet. A Washington telegram says:

The Attorney General was asked by an interviewer to give his views in regard to the full and explicit wherein it differed from the Senate bill, and he said that which he proposed on the ground that it was unconstitutional. He declined to do so, however, when he was told he was asked for strictly confidential. It is learned, however, from trustworthy sources that the Attorney General, as well as the President, considers the Senate bill as it passed, free from all such material features which were objectionable in the Senate bill, which differed from the original bill drawn by the Attorney General's objection to the Senate bill was based on the ground that it was not a national institution, but a sectional one, according to the opinion of the Attorney General's objection to the House bill, based on the ground that it was a national institution, but a sectional one, according to the opinion of the Attorney General's objection to the House bill, based on the ground that it was a national institution, but a sectional character. There were given to the Attorney General, in the discussion, but puts them in the mouths of others, and that this is warranted by many previous precedents in the legislative history of the Government.

The President has also approved the electoral count bill, the act authorizing the construction of a new bridge at Louisville, and fourteen private pension bills.

A bill has been introduced in the Dakota Legislature appropriating $15,000 to purchase seed grain for needy settlers whose crops were destroyed by drought last year.

Speaker Carlisle has written a letter to Representative Randall, in which he expresses the entire inability of the Democratic party to accept the internal revenue features of the bill prepared by the protection Democrats, and their desire for a much larger reduction in consumers' duties than the bill contains. The Speaker then, in behalf of the party, advances propositions upon which he says he can hope for party in favor of a bill to reduce the surplus revenue.

A caucus of Republican Senators was held last week to consider the policy to be pursued with regard to a reduction of the revenue. No conclusion was reached.

A bill has been introduced in the Nebraska Legislature providing that all railroads doing business in the State shall on the 1st of January of each year, issue annual passes to the State officials and members of the Legislature.

A bill to punish stickers who interfere with the lawful employment of others has passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 150 to 8, and passed the Senate by a fine of $500 and imprisonment for six months passed the Texas Senate with only three dissenting votes.

The Sunday law passed by the last Louisiana Legislature has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of that State.

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

At a meeting of window-shade manufacturers, at Pittsburgh, the Eastern and Western organizations consolidated, perfected a pooling arrangement, and decided to at once advance prices 5 to 7½ per cent.

A New York dispatch of Friday says: "The river front was practically in a state of siege. One thousand police have been massed in reserve at four different points. Patrol wagons have been stationed at each place so that the whole force can be concentrated at a given point in a short time. The Union can handle many times that number of riotous. One thousand more are in reserve at police headquarters." Seven hundred men employed at the blast furnaces at Sharpsville, Pa., struck for an advance of wages from a day. An offer of a 10 per cent. advance was refused. The molders in all the crucible steel works in Pittsburgh have made a demand for an advance in wages of 15 per cent. Five thousand men are involved.

Five hundred miners at Clinton, Pa., have struck for an increase of wages, dating from the first of the month, to revert a strike.

A New York dispatch says: "That the recent rail war appears to have ended unanimously for the course of labor is shown in the statement prepared by Bradstreet's of strikes begun during January. Within that limited period there occurred sixty-six strikes in various parts of the country, a very large majority of them being in Eastern cities. Of the strikes 78,000 workmen were involved, but without a development. One third of the strikes were successful or were settled by compromise, and nearly one-sixth of them failed. The others were still unsettled at the end of the month. During the present month the number of strikes has been largely augmented, so that now about 50,000 persons have struck since the beginning of the year. Over 14,000 more have been left unemployed through the closing of factories because of strikes elsewhere."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The American Cotton-Oil Trust has secured control of four-fifths of the mills of the country.

The German Socialists of Chicago have forwarded $2,000 to aid in re-electing Social Democrats to the German Reichstag.

Senator Riddleberger has written a letter to the editor of the Irish World about the retaliation bill. He says that if such a law would have the respect of England, we must consider it, "for then it would at least guarantee against insults and injuries than they practice."

Four girls, three of them sisters, were burned to death in a school-house at St. Sauveur, Quebec.

Applications have been made for over $4,000,000 of stock in the new Bank of the United States of New York, but the capital is limited to $2,000,000. The charter of the United States, states that Secretary Manning is to be president of the institution, and that his resignation is in the hands of President Cleveland. Mr. Jordan is to be Vice President of the bank.

The organized militia of Canada consists of 750 men. The Canadian Government has a large cartridge factory at Quebec.

FOREIGN.

The Egyptian Government has raised the blockade of the Soudan and reopened commerce with that region.

There is a vigorous opposition in Italy to the request that its Parliament approve the expenditure of $1,000,000 for the expenses of a new army of occupation in Africa.

Despite the warlike rumors, the German outlook is more pacific and the Foreign Minister are exchanging friendly compliments.

The English Government, it is reported, is about to make large purchases of Gatling guns, saying as the production in Hungary, Austria and Germany.

Bismarck is said to have succeeded in his negotiations with the Vatican, and that Germany and Italy are about to resume diplomatic relations.

In spite of all the rumors as to the effect of the Russian ukase upon commerce in England it is now allowed that the Tones will remain in power for some time to come.

Home rule is about to be approached from a new standpoint. Sir George Campbell, the distinguished Liberal member, will move an amendment to the Queen's speech, in which he will raise the question of the Scotland without Scotland's representatives to the other parts of the United Kingdom.

A bad harvest prospect comes from Europe that Germany is now a net importer, and that the Russian crop is the only one from which any large exportation can be expected.

Five thousand Abyssinians were killed in the battle in which the Italians were defeated near Massowah.

Ten thousand socialists assembled at Clerkenwell, London, to celebrate the 18th of Feb. 8, 1886. Some incendiary speeches were made, after which the mob dispersed in three different directions. One contingent, armed with paving stones, went toward the city, smashing house and shop windows, and finally and looting a butcher's shop. A detachment of police met the rioters at Newgate and dispersed them. Several rioters were arrested.

A socialistic meeting in a brewery at Sunderland, England, was dispersed by troops. The hall was wrecked, and several persons were wounded with bayonets.

A MEMORIAL of citizens of New Lebanon, N. Y., asking the legislature to repeal the act for the acquisition of Canada, was presented in the Senate on the 1st inst. Bills were passed for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, to prevent any agent of the Insurance Company from hiring out the labor of convicts, and to ascertain the extent and value of the leased fisheries of the United States. The Presidential bill was then taken up, and a continuance in the Senate (Al Aurora, Ind., Sanford G. Gibson, Chenoa, Ill., Sarah Morton, Mabel, Henry R. Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic state convention for the nomination of one Justice of the supreme court to serve eight years, one Regent of the University for the unexpired term of two years, and two Regents of the university, and to transaction of such other business as may properly come before it, will be held at the Detroit opera house, Detroit, Mich, on Tuesday, March 1, 1887, at 10 o'clock a. m.

According to the rule adopted by the convention held in Detroit in 1884, the state is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes; and each county is entitled to at least two delegates. Credentials of delegates must be resents of the counties they represent.

J. M. WESTON, Chairman.
JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call, Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates, and Antrim three.

Democratic County Convention.

A democratic county convention will be held at the court house, in the village of Boyne City, on Friday, Feb. 25, 1887, at 1 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of electing delegates to the democratic state convention, to be held at Detroit on Tuesday, March 1st, for the election of a democratic county committee, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before said convention. The several townships will be entitled to delegates by said convention as follows: Bear Lake, 2; Charlevoix Valley, 2; Chandler, 1; Charlevoix, 4; Eveline, 3; Hayes, 2; Hudson, 1; Marion, 1; Springvale, 1; Wilson, 1; Resort 1; South Arm, 2; Springvale, 3; Wilson, 1.

A. D. CRUIKSHANK, Chairman.

Township Caucus.

A caucus will be held at J. Milo Eaton's office next Monday evening, February 21st, at 7 o'clock, for the election of six (6) delegates to represent the township of Charlevoix at the democratic county convention to be held at Boyne City, February 25th instead.

CHAS. J. GRIER,

Secretary Manning has resigned.

The great strike in New York was a miserable failure, so far as the strikers are concerned, most of the men having returned to work at the terms of the corporation.

The democratic state central committee held a meeting in the parlors of the Lansing House last Friday afternoon and decided to call the state convention at Detroit, March 1, on a basis of 761 delegates.

The Kalamazoo Herald issued an illustrated valentine edition last Monday, embodying many of the latest and best features of modern journalism. The Herald is still in its first year, but bears evidence on its face of being well established in the good opinion of the Kalamazoo reading public.

The Dependent Pension bill, which President Cleveland has vetoed, may be found in full on our inside pages. We hope to have the veto message next week, after which our readers may better judge of the true merits and demerits of the bill. The opinion is current that the republicans and their friends so constructed the bill as to make it defective in the hope and expectation that the president would veto it, and thus give them a chance to make political capital. We believe that when the people fully understand the bill and the avenues for fraud it would open up, they will sustain the president's action

The Detroit Journal says: It is by no means certain that the prohibitionists will be as much comforted as is supposed by Mrs. Cleveland's drink ing water instead of wine at a ladies' lunch party in Washington, when the rest of the party took wine. Few women in the United States whose social position affects public opinion drink wine, even when it is offered them at dinner. What the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the prohibitionists want is a social custom and a statute law preventing their husbands, brothers and sons from drinking. If the men of the United States will stop drinking, it will be pretty safe to let the women do all that would in that case be done

The Dependent Pension Bill.

President Cleveland has shown himself worthy of the great confidence imposed in him by his action in returning to the house of representatives without his approval the dependent pension bill.

The reasons, which the president clearly and fully gives in his message to the house, must appeal with great force to congress and the country. As he points out, there is a radical difference of opinion over the meaning of the bill. Its provisions, if the measure became a law, would have to liberally construed, and such a construction would give every person now on the pension rolls not less than $12 per month, and would open the door to admission thereto of many thousands whose claims to be the recipients of pensions it would be difficult, if not impossible, under the broad language of the bill, to reject, and yet their acceptance would carry the pensions lists beyond all reason.

The question involved in this bill is not that of justice to the soldier, nor even that of generous recognition of their great service to the country. As framed, it goes beyond the support in past by the government of dependent ex-soldiers, and is therefore unjustifiable even on the theory of its chief promoters.—Free Press.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in my chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without benefit, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jas. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting so dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—D. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted several physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of it, I considered I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Edwin Vansciver, Quincy, Ill.

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a troublesome cough, and was very weak. I thought I knew my best, considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

For One Dollar.

We are frequently asked by people when subscribing for some city paper why we don't put the price of the JOURNAL down to One Dollar per year. In reply, we cannot undertake to compete with a city paper which is printed with perfect machinery by the ten thousand or hundred thousand. It costs just as much to prepare a newspaper form for the press for one hundred copies as it does for ten thousand copies. A local newspaper seldom expects to extend its circulation beyond a few hundred copies per week, while the city paper with which it competes in this way counts its readers by the ten thousand or hundred thousand is generally of very little or no value for local news.

To accommodate those who want a city paper and a local paper, and don't want to pay but one dollar each, if they will bring us the cash and pay for both in advance at one time we will furnish the JOURNAL at the rate of one dollar a year. That is, for Two Dollars cash in advance, we will send the JOURNAL and either the Detroit Weekly Free Press, Chicago Weekly News, Herald, Inter Ocean, Toledo Blade, National Tribune, New York Weekly World, Montreal Family Herald and Star, or in fact almost any city weekly usually sold for one dollar a year.

We are able to do this because with the above papers we have special clubbing arrangements by which we receive those papers at a reduction from the regular rate. Their reduction allows us a profit.

Subscribers must remember however, that this is a strictly cash-in-advance rate, and all subscriptions now in arrears must be paid up in full at regular rates, and one year in advance at the reduced rate, to secure the benefits of the arrangement.

It is expected that representatives from sister unions in the county will be present and take part in the work.

D. S. Way returned Tuesday from Spencer Creek, where he did quite a satisfactory business with his photo. outfit. With the negatives on hand, and other work to finish, he will have several weeks business in the Chain's valley, and those wanting work in his line will find the gallery open every day until further notice.

A report is in circulation that Rich. and Lake, of Advance, recently went to Canada to see his wife, who had refused to live with him, and that he lost control of himself and attempted bodily injury, and the authorities were compelled to arrest and confine him for the safety of his family. We have no reliable particulars of the affair.

W. S. Johnson's general store at Good Harbor, and all its contents, was destroyed by fire last Saturday night, the fire breaking out about 12 o'clock. The manager of the store Benj. Minsker and family lived in the second story of the building and barely escaped with their lives. Loss $8,000; insured in the Home of New York for $5,000.

A. D. Cruikshank went to Muskegon last week as grand marshal of the grand encampment, I. O. O. F., of Michigan, and returned home as grand junior warden. So Charlevoix continues to be represented in the affairs of the state in that society. Mr. Cruickshank was called on for a response as a visiting Odd Fellow to the address of welcome at a public meeting in the opera house Thursday afternoon, and won for himself many admirers.

Dexter & Noble once made the G. R. & I. Co. an offer to come here which ought to have brought that road. The company owned 17,000 acres of pine on the Manistee which they agreed to ship over the line to this place, manufacture it into lumber and ship it out over that road. This was equivalent to quite an amount of cash. The G. R. & I. did not accept and D. & N. sold the land for $450,000 or thereabouts.—Elk Rapids Progress.

It is reported that several young men (?) from Norwood are in the habit of coming to Charlevoix every Saturday and filling up with intoxicants to such an extent that they disgust the residents along the road with their riotous proceedings when they go home at night. It has been intimated by one of the aforesaid resident that if there is any more of such proceedings in front of his premises he will make a complaint of drunk and disorderly against the party.

Capt. R. Vanderhoef, of the Friant, was in town this week making arrangements for next season's business. It is definitely arranged that the Lon Cummings is to run in connection with the Friant, leaving East Jordan for Petoskey and Harbor Springs every morning, and returning in the afternoon, while the Friant will run on about the same schedule as last season. This arrangement will enable Charlevoix people to go to Petoskey on business and return the same day, and in numerous ways work to the advantage of Charlevoix. Capt. Vanderhoef promises that both boats will be in good shape for the season's business, and that they will be here just as soon as the ice will permit.

The boys of the G. A. R. never fail to receive large audiences whenever they provide any kind of entertainment for our citizens, and the camp-fire last Monday evening was no exception to the rule. Every seat in Bartholomew's opera house was filled at the hour for commencing the exercises, and there was no lack of interest in the various scenes till the close. The manual of arms, saber exercise, zouave drill, and camp fire scenes, were watched with interest and admiration. Mr. McCartney gave a short address, and Miss Rose M. Cody recited "Bay Billy" in a most pleasing manner. Hard tack and coffee were furnished free to all at the close of the exercises. The post cleared about $30 from the entertainment.

Our trip outside last week convinced us more than ever that northern Michigan has the most desirable winter climate of any part of the state. One day there was nearly two feet of snow and very cold weather in the southern and central part of the state the next there was a rain and sleet which made walks and streets almost impassable, the next there was a pouring rain and the ice and slush changed to mud, while the next day a cold snap froze the mud into hubs and ruts. The whole southern part of the state has been cursed with destructive floods, attended with loss of life and hundreds of thousands of dollars damage, while our people have been enjoying the blessings of good sleighing and lively business, and are secure in the knowledge that the snow will go off gradually without annoyance or danger.—Harbor Springs Independent.

Early Closing of Stores.

At the meeting of the Business Men's Association Tuesday evening, the matter of early closing of stores came under discussion. Some little opposition on the part of consumers had been manifested, probably on account of the matter not having been sufficiently advertised in advance to avoid some disappointments which occurred last week. On the part of the dealers it was believed that the movement would occasion no material loss of trade, would result in a saving of fuel and lights, and would relieve business men and their clerks of some of their extra hours of night work, and give them more time for social enjoyments. There was some complaint in regard to the ringing of the bell at the hour for closing,—it appearing that all did not hear it. If a good-sized farm bell were placed on either F. W. Craine & Co.'s or Stackman & Iddings' stores, and the rope properly secured from mischievous boys, it would overcome this difficulty as such a bell could easily be heard the entire length of Bridge street. The spirit of the movement, properly adjusted and carried out cannot fail of good results.

Historical Society.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather about twenty five or thirty of the members met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Allen, President E. H. Green called the meeting to order. The paper of the evening, "Charlemagne" by Rev. A. T. Wateman was full of interest and thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The instrumental selections, by Mrs. Ella Smith, and the Misses Cochran and Hilton were among the best of the season.

Select reading by Miss Anna Blodget, "My Wife's Relations," provoked much amusement. "The Organ Builder" by Miss Flora Nelson was listened to with an attention that needed no further eulogy.

The announcement, "Congregational singing" brought a visible smile to every countenance. Miss Cochran took a seat at the piano, and as we listened to the music, a loyal chord was struck in each heart, and that good old song, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," was sung with a zest that made the parlors ring.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Carr, "French Revolution" by Robert Emmet.

A Popular Literary Work.

The third volume of ALDEN'S "Cyclopedia of Universal Literature," now ready (cloth binding 90 cents, half morocco 75 cents), contains 400 pages, and represents eighty-six of the most famous authors of the world, of all nations and languages, including among others: Bossuet, Boswell, Brantôme, Brougham, Browning, Bryant, Buffon, Buckle, Burke, Burns, Burroughs, closing with Byron. These are nearly three hundred choice literary selections representing these authors—a truly wonderful amount of entertaining literature for a little money. The following are representative opinions of this work by competent literary critics:

"The third volume strengthens the good opinion formed by its predecessors. The articles, though brief, are remarkably comprehensive, presenting in a few pithy paragraphs the very facts the reader most wishes to know, while the extracts from the writings of the authors described are selected with discriminating taste. The work is well worth the price."—The Inter-Ocean.

"It places within the reach of the reader a good knowledge of the world's literature, and those who have made it, and brings them to form a good literary taste, and to desire literary culture. It seems to us a work for him to read, in the first place, and then to consult. This cyclopedia tells him, with sufficient fullness for his purpose, if it is a complete and reliable guide to the best reading."—Commercial Advertiser, Detroit, Mich.

"The articles are remarkably comprehensive, presenting in a few pithy paragraphs the very facts the reader most wishes to know, while the extracts from the writings of the authors described with discriminating taste. The work is well worth the price."—Inter-Ocean.

"The work is designed to be completed in 10 volumes. The publisher offers a sample volume, post paid, for the nominal price of 25 cents, on condition that within three days after receipt you will either remit the remainder of the price or return the book, in which case your money will be refunded—half morocco binding 50 cents, on the same conditions. Descriptive catalogue of the publisher's very large list of standard books, sent free. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, Pearl St., New York.

HILDA'S DISCOVERY.

BY NATHAN D. UNNEE.

In the guileless love and hope of her youthful heart, Hilda Delorme had imagined that her marriage had been attended by exceptional auspices of a happy and unclouded future; but her honeymoon had hardly begun to wane in the beautiful autumnal scarlet home to which her lover-husband, Archibald Delorme, had borne her directly after the ceremony that had made them one, before her breast grew troubled with strange doubts and fears.

She gradually became conscious of his being frequently preoccupied with other thoughts than those pertaining to herself; an expression of melancholy and reserve grew blended with the gentle looks that so often fastened upon her face; he was subject to sudden mutterings and fitful starts when he deemed himself unobserved; and there were other indications of a secret trouble preying on his mind, to which all his assevarations to the contrary, when she taxed him with the change, were insufferably blind her. And at last, one day, when her waiting-maid, in answer to a query as to the whereabouts of her master, replied carelessly that she had seen him walking on the cliffs with a strange woman, to all appearances a sort of mendicant, Hilda's heart gave a great, painful leap, and she felt a sickening, suspicious uneasiness such as is only known to those whose jealousy is in proportion with their love.

I could not see who or what the strange woman was, ma'am," was all the menial could say, in answer to the eager but carefully veiled inquiries with which her young mistress at once began to follow up this bit of information. "I was coming up from the fishing village, and their backs were turned toward me as I saw them strolling along the edge of the cliffs. I only noticed that the woman with Mr. Delorme appeared to be tall and shapely. She also seemed to be well dressed, and I marked something beaceking-like in her gestures, which I should think she must be begging alms. But my master seemed to be sternly refusing all her appeals. He was shaking his head and his walking-stick at the same time, as the beech tree shut 'em out from view."

Hilda finally forbore any further questioning, but the poison of distrust had by this time unequivocally entered her soul. What could it mean? Was it an affair with some other woman that had caused the slight but still perceptible change in her husband's manner toward herself? The very supposition was torture.

He entered the house not long afterward, but she cloaked the feelings that were oppressing her, and set herself to watching him narrowly. It seemed to her that he betrayed even more preoccupation and nervousness than she had yet remarked in him, though he abated nothing of the courtly kindliness with which he had ever greeted her; and finally, when he pleaded a pressing business affair at the neighboring city of Halifax as an excuse for not partaking of the accustomed luncheon with her, her jealous apprehensions grew acute.

"You've been out walking ever since breakfast, Archy," said she, petulantly. "Can you remain with me now?"

"You must know that nothing would please me better, Hilda, darling," he replied, kissing her; "but the affair that summons me to the city is as pressing as it is unpleasant. I may sometime tell you about it," he added, with much gravity, "but at present it would only distress you needlessly. I will not keep you waiting dinner, be sure."

She made no further efforts to detain him, as he kissed her again, and, resuming his hat and cane which he had for momentarily cast aside, passed out of the chamberlike entrance-hall, opening from which they had been speaking together. A moment later he moved along the graveled walk outside, with his brows knit still more, and listlessly swinging his hat and cane in one hand, while the other was positively thrust in the bosom of his overcoat.

Hilda felt miserably. She looked eagerly after him through the great bow-window, with her forehead leaning and falling painfully, and one jeweled hand clenched tightly at her fair white throat, as though to still its bitter and rebellious throbbings.

"Can it possibly be true—can it be—can a secret from me, Archibald Delorme," she muttered between her teeth; "and I must find it out, or sleep no more."

She threw herself into a footstool, rested her chin upon her hand, and, while beating a tattoo upon the rich carpet with her pretty foot, began to recall the circumstances of her marriage, in whose rosy retrospect she certainly failed to find any premonitions of the doubts and suspicions that had grown so distressing. She had first made her husband's acquaintance in her own refined circle in England. He was known to be well-born, as well as rich; her parents had welcomed his suit for her hand; and, though he had always maintained a certain reticence concerning his past life, he had borne an exalted reputation among his select and rather narrow circle of friends, and lastly, he had wooed her with such manly earnestness and delicacy as to speedily win the overflowing and undivided affection of her youthful heart, in spite of the difference in their ages, for he was fully twenty years her senior.

Turn, directly after their marriage, he had brought her over seas to this fair old Acadian home, with its superb grounds, its romantic sea views, its numerous servants, and its noble appointments, which he had inherited from a grand uncle on his mother's side but a short time previous to his union with her. Then, mistress of all she surveyed, she had lived like a happy little queen, with her husband ever at her side, petted and admired by the best people of the neighborhood, one of the acknowledged belles of the many fêtes that had been given in her honor by the military and social circles of the adjoining city, and secure in her husband's unchiding love, until the recent shadow of suspicion and distrust that had arisen between them.

No, puzzle her brain and search her memory as she might, she could alight upon no possible motive for that unwonted preoccupation and secret sadness that had taken possession of him, other than that his thoughts must be engaged with some other woman—through the passion of some new love, or the fear of some slighted old one, which had arisen, like an accusing ghost, to mar the felicity that he had found in her, in his own loving young wife, Hilda Delorme.

"Yes; it must be one or the other," she at last muttered, as she aroused herself from her painful revery to pace the floor with nervous steps. "This torment is too great to be longer endured. That strange woman whom Norah saw him walking with on the cliffs—this sudden and unexplained visit to Halifax at this unwonted hour! Since he will not tell me his secret, I must find it out."

Her distress and curiosity at length became so overmastering that she suddenly resolved upon a step the mere thought of which, under cooler and less tumultuous conditions, would have caused her a self-accusing blush. She determined to institute a surreptitious search into a certain secret drawer of her husband's secretary, which he had always kept jealously guarded, under the plea of its containing precious documents pertaining to his estate that it would be better never to disturb.

She did blush a little upon coming to this determination, but, overpowered as she was by her growing suspicions, she nevertheless hastened to carry it out. She swept into the cabinet-room with the desk which adjoined the drawing-room, and, by means of a bunch of keys that hung from one of the inclosures, opened it without much difficulty. The secret private drawer had been pointed out to her before, and, after a brief investigation, neither did she find much trouble in opening this also by pressing a small spring hidden underneath the wood.

She had hardly expected to find therein anything but the business documents of which he had hinted. But, to her surprise, the drawer contained nothing but some torn fragments of a letter and a copy of an English newspaper. The letter fragments were so minute that hardly an entire word could be made out on any one of them, but the writing was obviously in a woman's hand, and, finally, upon one of the larger morsels, she deciphered the word "Estelle," twice, flourish under the heath, which caused her to deem it the letter's signature.

She greedily devoured the contents of the newspaper. It gave an account of a London divorce trial of five years previous, in which a Colonel Archibald Menteith sued for divorce against Estelle Menteith, his wife, upon charges of gross criminality and misconduct, whose details she first read in the edge of the sea-beating cliff, and now and then turning her face toward the sea to watch the isolated and stately mansion in which she, Hilda Delorme, the young bride, was then sitting.

Instead be she the very same that Norah saw him walking with this morning?" she muttered, lifted in a fright at the mean, and why am I tortured thus?"

She watched the figure with powerful looks until it disappeared behind a jutting ledge, then she strove with a great and stormy tumult in her soul, and paced the floor with unsteady steps. Another emotion from Norah, to the effect that dinner would be ready, came to her to rally all her powers of self-control to her aid, after which she went down stairs, without making her evening toilet, which was something she had not done before since her marriage. Her husband greeted her with his customary kindness, but he so at moody abstraction seemed to have increased so much that he did not appear to notice or any of the disturbance that she felt sure she was betraying in her looks and manner, and she hardly knew whether to be pleased or chagrined at his lack of penetration.

Their conversation quickly flagged, as it had repeatedly done of late, once, indeed, Hilda was on the point of confessing over a thing that she had done and suffered, and to make a passionate appeal to him for relief from the suspicions that were making her so miserable, but a certain absence of sympathy in his look and bearing deterred her; and shortly after dinner she made an excuse of feeling indisposed, and quitted him for the night, without his making any opposition to her departure other than a mild expression of surprise that she should retire so soon.

One more in the solitude of her own apartment she busied herself anew with the vexatious task of piecing together the fragments of the anonymous letter, but with little better success than before; and she at last sought her couch, outwearied, disconsolate, and very wretched.

After a night of broken slumber and distressing dreams, however, she awoke in the gray gray of dawn, and possessed with a sudden conviction that she would now have no difficulty in reconstructing the letters to her satisfaction. Her interest promptings did not deceive her. She had hardly set herself afresh to the task, after a speedy and feverish toilet, than the formerly refractory fragments seemed to grow into shapeliness and intelligibility under her manipulation, as if by magic.

At length their arrangement was complete; the entire letter, neatly pieced together upon the card-board, lay before her without lapse or break; and then, in the light of the new day, her greedy gaze devoured its purport as follows:

"NEW JOHN'S, WOOD, LONDON.

"ARCHIBALD MONTEITH—At last, as you have written me, you have got your wish! Indifference, powerful friend, has proved to have aided you, and the law that makes you a free man, with the option of taking a woman, makes me, your wife, a despised, degraded creature, so other may be free.

"But do not flatter yourself that you will be rid of me, Archy Monteith!

"Whatever you may do or say, I will follow you, and haunt you, and disturb your peace.

"Should you ever marry again, I will sow your path with dire ill-luck and misfortune.

"You may seek new scenes and a new identity; you may even change your name, in accordance with the custom of a city which you can inherit the rich Canadian estates of your uncle, and yet I will still be known hereafter as Archibald Delorme, in lieu of Archibald Monteith; you may be a cripple for the ends of the earth, but I, hearkening up the trail, will be at your heel, for all that, or a suicide, we couldn't tell which.

"How!" cried Delorme. "Estelle, you say, fell over the cliff, then?"

"Yes, sir; or at least the lady did as you was a walkin with on the top of Indian Head a little while ago," replied the fisherman. "After we and my mates saw you leave her to return to the house, we kept sheers of her pretty spry because of her actin' so strange at first, and then we was jerkin' at seein' Mrs. Delorme hurryin down to the water through the gap in a very excited way, which sort of drew off our attention from the other a bit. Then, soon after Mrs. Delorme reached the bottom of the stone steps leading up, one of my mates gave a yell and pointed to the top of Indian Head. None of us could tell exactly how it happened—whether she jumped off, or slipped and slid over—but we saw the strange lady making grabs at the air and screeching terribly. She fell on the rocks right at the bottom of the flight, and was dead a minute after we took her up."

Archibald Delorme gave a groan, and turned his face in his hands.

Hilda was too long enough to hear the close of the fisherman's story—to be aware that her husband was saying or doing anything but a murderer—and then swooned away for the second time that morning, and was carried to her room by her husband and Mrs. Saunders.

An attack of brain-fever followed her prostration, consequent upon the terrible shock of that morning's catastrophe, and she was confined to her bed for several weeks.

Her husband was the very soul of tenderness and devotion during the entire period. He scarcely quitted her bedside, was even jealous of the hired nurses, and at last, one day when her convalescence was thought safe, he took her hands in his and made a clean breast of the secrets of his former miserable married life.

He had never loved his unprincipled woman, he confessed, but he had justly deemed he had followed him across the sea soon after his second marriage, and so bullied him with blackmailing demands, both by letter and personal interviews, coupled with threats of exposing his past misery to Hilda and his young friends, as to render his life a burden. He told her how, upon his last interview with her, she had boldly expressed her determination to introduce herself into his home, and whose aim in Hilda's eyes, but that she had in all probability altered her intention, and sought herself in self-destruction soon after his quitting her to return to the house.

Hilda heard all and forgave all. She had an unconvincing to make on her own account, and she did it with the utmost freedom, confessing her unworthiness for the suspicions and distrust to which she had afforded a too ready lodgment in her breast, and seriously averring never again to withdraw her confidence in his truth and manhood.

So, at last the evil cloud that had arisen between these married lovers was dissipated. Since then their union has been sunny, and free from any cloud, save the blight, while the erring and unfortunate Estelle, sleeping in the remote grave, which both Hilda and her husband oft visit, for the purpose of adding a wreath of flowers and dropping the reluctant tear to her helpless memory.

Needless to Say.

Sidney Smith was always ready to amuse an evening company by cutting paper into curious figures, and by a display of clever tricks, few of which ever failed to demand a kiss from each young lady present. His biographer tells us that his company was much sought after.—Somerville Journal.

Absolutely Pure.

When the appetite fails, and sleep grows restless and unrefreshing, there is trouble ahead. The digestive organs, when healthy, have lord the nervous system, when vigorous and vacillating gives to possessor no measured peace. A tonic, to be effective, should not be a mere appetizer, nor are the nerves to be strengthened and nourished by the unaided action of a sedative or a narcotic. What is required is a medicine which invigorates the stomach and promotes assimilation of food by the system, by which means the nervous system, as well as the blood, and the whole human organism, is nourished. These are the results of using Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine whose reputation is founded firmly in public confidence, and which, unlike other tonics, is free from alcohol and all other properties. It is used by the best physicians in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney, and uterine weakness, and liver disorders.

A BROKEN RAIL.

Part of a Train Plunges Down a Vermont Gorge to a Frozen River.

Nearly Fifty People Meet a Frightful Death in Its Most Agonizing Shape.

(White River Junction (Vt.) special.)

An express train, bound from Boston for Montreal, met with a terrible accident near Woodstock, on the Central Vermont Railroad, early Saturday morning. The train started from this city on time, but was delayed at White River Junction, so it was about an hour and a half late when it left there. It consisted of a locomotive, baggage-car, postal-car, two passenger coaches and two sleeping-cars, and was running at the usual rate of speed. When about two hundred yards from the bridge that spans the river, near the old Windsor Station, a broken rail was struck. The locomotive, baggage-car and postal-car broke away from the rest of the train, passing over the bridge in safety. The rest of the train was thrown from the rails and continued on the road-bed until it came near the end of the bridge, but then it ran over the embankment, and all of the cars fell into the White River, some fifty feet below. The scene at this point is frightful, and will be long remembered by those who saw the crash.

As soon as possible the detached part of the train was uncoupled and run back to the scene of the disaster. The groans of the injured were heartrending. Assistance also came from people living in the vicinity, and everything was done to rescue and relieve the injured. Soon after help arrived it was discovered that fire had started in the first passenger coach, and soon the entire train was ablaze, thus adding a new horror to the already frightful situation. Those present were powerless to stop the fire, and desisted from attempting to rescue those imprisoned in the cars.

The rescuers met another and an unexpected obstacle in the best, which had become so intense that they were obliged to relinquish their efforts to save the sufferers, and were compelled to retreat to a place of safety for themselves, and to bemoan unwilling and horror-stricken witnesses of the awful holocaust. In addition to this, and to add to the terrors and sufferings of the passengers, the weather was intensely cold, and the rescuers were hindered thereby in their work. No water could be obtained with which to check or to extinguish the flames.

There were between eighty and ninety persons on the train. Of these thirty-five are accounted for as being burned to death, forty-three are dead, four are uninjured, leaving only four unaccounted for. It is utterly impossible to identify more than two or twelve of these recovered, so the list cannot be published. Relatives in this city are anxious to learn the fate of their friends, who had been in the train. Among Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

OFFICERS.

President—Mrs. R. A. Campbell.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. L. E. Mudge.
Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. J. A. Hawkins.
Treasurer—Mrs. Ella Wheeler.
First Vice President—Mrs. C. J. Bryant.
Second Vice President—Mrs. G. W. Jefferies.
Third Vice President—Mrs. Chas. See.

In response to an invitation from the ladies of the W. C. T. U. of East Jordan, the different unions of the county met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Empey, for a social time. About eleven o'clock load after load of ladies representing Boyne Falls, Boyne City, Ironton and Charlevoix unions, numbering in all about forty, were warmly welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Empey, and a delegation of the the East Jordan ladies. Notwithstanding the large house into which we were ushered, it began to look with the fast arriving loads that they might have their hands more than full. They proved equal to the emergency. In a very short time we were comfortably seated, partaking of a sumptuous dinner; having the company of several clergymen and a few other gentlemen. As soon as all had been fed, preparations were made for a business session.

By this time re-inforcements of the East Jordan friends had arrived until we numbered about seventy-five.

The president of the East Jordan union called to order, asking the clergymen present to conduct the devotional exercises. After which she stated that although it was their regular day, they would waive their meeting, and consider the county a t-rests and that of the present campaign for the Amendment, inviting a district president, Mrs. Campbell, to present the interests to be considered. Mrs. Campbell secured the reading of the circulars to the unions and pastors from our state officers. She also gave the ladies present something of the plan as laid out by the district officers for our own district work after which there was a very general, interesting, and profitable discussion, participated in by both ladies and gentlemen, occupying the time until we were obliged to adjourn for our departure home. The general expression being that the hour demanded all the work possible from every christian minister, every temperance organization and individual interested in the temperance cause. That we must, in some way, bring this question before the people in every village and school district, looking to every one in the coming contest to help in some way.

A rising vote of thanks was tendered our host and hostess and the ladies of East Jordan for the delightful entertainment enjoyed. All left feeling inspired with new vigor for the work before us, and that it had been an occasion of rare pleasure. The day could bring mild and pleasant made even the long ride enjoyable.

The Charlevoix ladies recognizing the benefit of such gathering invited the unions of the county to meet with them on Thursday, Feb. 24th.

Good Advice.

Be patient. Patronize home industry. Don't tickle yourself in the imagination that the sun's not rich enough for your blood. Are you a wealthy young man? Then don't be a champ. You haven't any soft snap. Remember that people live in other people's opinion. You've got a prejudice to fight against. Don't stump your toe on it. You can get as good clothes here as in any other city. Spend your money at home. Help to build up your city. You may want patronage some time. Try to deserve it. Make yourself a blessing to the community. It's time all champs were dead. Be a jealous young citizen. Stir about. Let your blood circulate. Don't be a lost. Don't be a drone. Don't be a consumptionist. Don't be a champ.—Toledo Blade.

The Great Pioneer Newspaper.

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan is enjoyed by The Detroit Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of The Free Press is the history of Michigan. Published while this commonwealth was yet a Territory, The Free Press was compiled as a power in the land at the time of her admission into the sisterhood of states. From that day to this, the energies of the paper have always been directed to, and identified with, the advancement of the state's best interest; it has grown with its growth and shared in its prosperity.

It is no wonder that The Free Press el. on the right to add to the glory of being the oldest, the even more honorable title of being THE BEST paper—the best for the Merchant, Mechanic, Farmer, the best for the Family, and, when quantity and quality of matter is considered, beyond question THE CHEAPEST.

In the Daily is published in compact readable form, in addition to its own special di-patches, all the Associated Press News, Quotations of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and State News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current Literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, 8 pages Daily, 12 to 16 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is 15 cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 60 cents a month or $7 a year.

THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the weekly edition. A 56-x-84 column paper—into full of measure reading matter, crisp, attractive, interesting and instructive. ORIGINAL STORIES, both short and continued; TOPICS OF THE TIMES; THE HOUSEHOLD, conducted by women readers; LETTER BOX and PUZZLES; POINTED EDITORIAL COMMENT; SPECIAL ARTICLES on thousands of subjects, and a complete summary of the NEWS OF THE WEEK are among its attractions. Its members among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known authors and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is enormous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per week. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. Price, one DOLLAR a year.

Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

Beautiful weather.

Some of our young people go to Charlevoix to-day to celebrate Washington's birthday.

Date Parks has commenced making ties on Mr. Gaskill's, he recently bought of G. Cooper.

Mr. Dole, and a friend of Bellaire, made us a short call on their way home from East Jordan last Saturday.

One night last week one of our promising young men, on his way home from East Jordan, at a late hour, saw in front of him in the road a big bear that showed no inclination to get out of his way. After going ahead of him some distance it leisurely turned aside into a cross road. He drove home, put out his horse, aroused a neighbor, who, with his son, took their gun, and went in search of bruin, and finally tracked him to a farm yard where they saw before them a large black hog.

There will be preaching at night at Johnson's school house. Every body come.

A Wild Station of the Plains.

The sunlight came playing through the trees, and burned on his serene face like molten gold. The graceful body, round and smooth, expanded where the vast haunches and sloping shoulders set into it in swift curves of binding muscle that stretched to the deer-like neck, with its proud arch and mane, the inch leg strung like a harp, with cords of steel to the ivory hoof. His flowing mane and tail seemed impatient to be waving backward in the strong wind of his flying gallop. Though he stood like a bronze, with only the trumpet nostrils working to catch the air, the small head, while even to the eyes, turned over his shoulder to survey the intruders who had disturbed his watering place. * * * There stood the horse, keenly alive to his danger, nay, even challenging it, for the ears laid themselves slowly back—the eyes began to shine.—Capt. Remsey in Outing.

THE DIAMOND RATTLER.

Venom Incarnate on the Burning Sand of Florida—Moccasins and Adders.

"One day last fall," said a bilious-looking man to a reporter, "I was walking along the track of a narrow-gauge railroad that runs from the St. John's river back into the pine woods of Florida. In accordance with an unwritten law which draws the line at 95 degrees, the unofficial custodians of thermometers in that region recognize and record no temperature which rises above that mark. The temperature on the afternoon in question was recorded as 95 degrees in the shade. In the sun the temperature may go as high as it pleases, and on that day it went so high that nothing but a pyrometer would answer for measuring it. I had just received a paper containing the account of the Grant funeral, and was reading it as I slowly wended beneath an umbrella. A person who has spent several months in Florida becomes so accustomed to keeping a lookout for snakes that he scans his path unconsciously. So strong does this habit become that I caught myself walking for snakes in Broadway a month after my return to New York.

"It was well along in the story of the old warrior's burial, when suddenly I found myself half way down the railroad embankment, and I had got there by one jump. Just abreast of me between iron rails was a rattlesnake in the act of coiling. What it was that had alarmed me I do not know—whether I caught a glimpse of him before he coiled at all, or whether I heard his rattle as he coiled, struck, and raised his menace. Probably he had been lying in the hollow of one of the rails, where the heat that is so pleasant to the snake tribe was much greater than on the burning sand even, and had been awakened from his siesta by the disturbing tread of the engine. I climbed up the embankment and looked him over from a safe distance. As he coiled and angrily raised his head, he was venom incarnate. He was a medium-sized specimen of the 'diamond' rattler, so called because of the diamond-shaped black spots along his back. He lay coiled ready for a spring, till he was induced to strike at a stick. Then he writhed on the sand as though it had been a heated iron plate beneath him. He kept his rattle sounding at short intervals. The impulse seemed to start close to his head, run the length of him like a shiver of light on his glossy skin, and give to his tail a snap something like that of a whiplash. He seemed completely gripped with venom, till he was angry with himself and at war with all the rest of the world. His small eyes, of the color of a pebble of mercury, were almost closed. He made little effort to move away when he was again menaced by the stick, but coiled and flung himself at it as often as he was approached. A rattlesnake can strike only about one-third of its length. Bearing this in mind, I kept them a safe distance. I studied him a while longer, and then broke his back by a whack with the stick. After thumping him till he seemed to be dead I picked him up on the stick and carried him down to the road I met a Gerky. He gave the snake a wide berth as he passed. Then he turned around and called: 'Hey! look out fo' dat ar snake, boss. Dey'm powerful mean critters, dem heads an' tails.'

"Moccasins and blow adders," continued the bilious man, "are the other venomous snakes that are found nearly all over Florida. In the rivers, branches, lakes, and bayous moccasins are far from scarce. They like to crawl out and sun themselves on dry logs and tufts of grass. They are considered as poisonous as rattlesnakes, and the chances of being struck by them are much greater, for they are too sluggish to get out of the way, and they give no warning rattle before they strike. In the headwaters of the St. John's they are as thick as wiggles in a rain-water barrel, and are not at all shy. A big one is between six and seven feet long and four inches in diameter. They swim with their heads only on the surface of the water, and propel themselves by a motion of the body similar to that with which a snake moves on dry land. Recovery from the effects of moccasin bites are not rare; but in many instances the wound inflames and gives the person considerable trouble about the time of the anniversary of the bite for several years.

"Prof. Yerkes, once of Waterbury, Conn., for one of the ablest writers of snake stories in the south. One afternoon he was crossing a branch of the St. John's on a fallen log. Right ahead of him he saw the biggest moccasin he had ever seen. He went back a set out a thick pole, and with it he dealt the snake a tremendous whack. He noticed before hitting him that the snake made no attempt to strike, and he thought it queer. He dragged the moccasin home, knotted a cord around his tail, hooked the steel gaff into the loop, mounted a barrel, and hoisted the snake up till his head cleared the ground. While trying to find the right notch on the steelyards he was astounded to see a moccasin slip tail foremost out of the original snake's mouth. He got down from the barrel and reached for the stick. Moccasin No. 2 made no attempt to twist and strike, and he was dispatched with one whack. The professor thought he would weigh the snakes separately, so he knotted a cord to No. 2's tail, mounted the barrel, hooked on the steelyards, and lifted him up. If he was surprised when he undertook to weigh No. 1, he was more than surprised now, for a third moccasin's tail appeared from the suspended snake's mouth, and in a jiffy the snake, which had been doubly swallowed, lay wriggling on the sand. This one was rather feeble, and the professor dispatched him with hardly an effort. Then the professor laid the three snakes in a string, heads to tails, and measured them, and afterward he weighed them. The only thing I remember about the figures is that the second snake was five inches shorter than the first, and the third snake just three. I have given only a bare outline of the story. You ought to hear the professor put in the details.

"The blow adder," continued the bilious man, "is found in all sizes up to the limit of its growth. When I first went to Florida I fell in with one when I was walking across a cleared patch one day. I happened to see him just in time to avoid stepping on him. He lay coiled on the grass, and I took him for a sleek black snake, and bent over him to admire his glossy coat. Greatly to my surprise he struck at me, and gave me a close call. I finished him with a club, still thinking that he was a black snake, though I was puzzled by the bad temper he had displayed. He was once and a half as long as my umbrella stick. A cracker came along and I began telling him how the black snake had struck at me. 'Dat's a mighty lucky thing he didn't hit you,' said the cracker, 'for he's a blow adder, and them's about the most venomous critters in those yer parts.'"—N. Y. Sun.

President Lincoln's War Substitute.

"President Lincoln had a substitute in the army," said Mr. Noble D. Larner, while talking over old times in Washington, "and he was credited to the Third ward of this city. It was in the winter of 1864-5, that Gen. Fry, then provost marshal here, sent for me and told me that the president wanted a substitute to go to the war for him. At that time I was connected with the Third Ward Draft club, the principal object of which was to secure substitutes for members who might be drafted. There lived in our ward a son of a clergyman who bore the usual reputation given to ministers' sons, and he was naturally 'a no'er do well.' This fellow was desired to represent the president and a check from the white house for $800 payable at Riggs' bank was the consideration. Nothing was ever heard of the young man afterward, but it was generally believed that he was killed during the Wilderness campaign. Our draft club gave a concert for the benefit of their fund at Ford's opera-house, on the Tenth street, the evening that the president received his exemption paper, which I remember was inclosed in a gilt frame and exhibited from the stage during the performance. Although I had served three months in the army and I was honorably discharged I was drafted, and had to look out for a substitute, too. He was a raw-boned, gigantic specimen of an Irishman, and I kept trace of him for some time after he joined the army. One day after the war closed I thought I would look up the man's record, and upon inquiring at the war department concerning him I found the word 'deserted' marked opposite his name."—Washington Critic.

Curiosities of Waste.

A peculiar class of book hunters haunt the large junk shops in search of rare or odd books and the popular monthly magazines. These genteel chiffoniers, if they may be called such, occasionally strike valuable finds in old literature, which costs them at the rate of 6 cents per pound. Another class of buyers look up the monthly parts of magazines, and upon completing the set dispose of them, usually to the Cornhill second-hand book-stores. These buyers often tackle a pile of old paper stuff that keeps them busy for a week or longer, and it is often the case that their labor is unrewarded. The law of compensation seems to be a factor in the odd junk business, for many people get a good living from other people's waste. Even old tin cans, which were formerly condemned as useless, and millions of which have been planted in the creation of the Black bay district of Boston, are now utilized, and the metal sheet made from them can be japanned, or tinned, or galvanized, or treated in any way that the material made from the original ore is treated. Out of the iron are made buttons, shoe-lace ends, snow cards, telephones, electric lights and letter boxes, small wares, etc. There are parties in Boston, who make the collection of old tin, tin cuttings, and old tin cans a regular business, and make money out of it. The material is sent to New York, where it is utilized. So the utilization of tin-plate cuttings and the recovery of the tin has grown out of the same channel of scientific thought and experiment that loop had charmed the gypsy from the dung-hill and converted them into sheets of paper.

The famous cedars of Lebanon are taken care of by the authorities. There are 397 of them—twenty-two more than in 1810 and 373 more than in 1578. When they were counted by the German botanist, Ramvolff.

Prize folders shouldn't fool with Indian boys. One evening last week, one of our noted fiddlers was invited to spend the evening with one of his neighbors and to bring along his fiddle. An Indian boy was also invited to bring his accordeon to spend the evening at the same place, and have a musical entertainment. We are told that the fiddler tried to beat the Indian boy, and during his fiddle up as high as possible, dodged from one tune to another, sweating like a butcher, but for all his fiddling and fast playing, the accordeon-player sat perfectly cool, and kept up with him. We are also told that this Indian cannot be beat in these parts as a player of an accordeon or a harmonica.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

At West Suffield, Conn., Rose Daly decapitated her illegitimate child, threw the head in a stove, and placed the body in a cellar. The head, which had been cut off with a table-knife, was taken from the fire in a cooked condition.

"Boodle" Alderman O'Neil of New York, convicted of bribery last week in that city, has been sentenced to four years and six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $2,000.

Dr. Howard Crosby, in a lecture before the students of Rutgers College, contended that intemperance must be dealt with as a sin, as the pledge has proven a failure, and that the use of wine should not be condemned.

Emile Paul, of New York, won several thousand dollars for himself and jockeys by eating eighty-two quails in forty-one days. He now offers to bet $500 that he can dispose of thirteen in one day.

WESTERN.

The fire by which Jesse Arnot's livery stable in St. Louis was destroyed also caused the destruction of the bearer on which the remains of President Lincoln were conveyed to the tomb. Four lives were lost, and 200 vehicles and 100 horses consumed.

At Hannibal, Mo., Mrs. Thomas R. Bennett took her 4-year-old daughter to Mount Olivet Cemetery, swallowed a dose of poison, and lay down on the grave of a child to die. She lacked the nerve to poison her daughter. They lay all night in the rain, and were rescued at breakfast-time. The mother's feet were badly frozen, but the child stood the ordeal well.

The engagement of Mrs. Langtry, at McVicker's Theater, Chicago, has thus far proved the most successful one, financially, played at that popular house in many a day. This week Tom Taylor's famous play, "Lady Clancarty," will be produced. The leading incidents and personages of the drama are historical. The history of the assassination plot of 1696 has been told by Macaulay from materials furnished by state trials of that time. The story of the marriage of Lord and Lady Clancarty while in their youth, of their long separation and their encounter as strangers, the rapid growth of their love, Clancarty's arrest by his brother-in-law, and his pardon obtained from the king by the brave wife are all matters of history, and make up the incidents of a highly interesting play.

Thirty buildings were burned by an incendiary at Anaconda, M. T. Loss $75,000.

Sidney Walsh, a fashionable young Englishman, was found to have committed twenty-one burglaries in Cleveland, O.

John Jacobson strangled his 4-months-old child at Omaha and then hanged himself. He was in ill-health.

S. S. Hollingsworth, ex-County Treasurer at Vincennes, Ind., was found guilty of embezzling $80,000, and given three years in the penitentiary.

Great damage was done by the flood at Lyons, Michigan. Twenty buildings were carried away. There were many narrow escapes from drowning.

Managers of large ranches in Indian Territory report that the winter has been the mildest for five years, and that the loss of stock will only be from 2 to 4 per cent. Advices from the Yellowstone ranges are to the effect that two hundred thousand head of cattle are suffering terribly for grass and water, and carcasses can be counted by hundreds along the river.

A Mrs. Stickney, a convert to the faith cures at Mooseparle, Minn., resuscitated the body of her daughter after it had been dead two months, in the belief that it could be restored to life by prayer. She had it brought to her house and claims that at one time since she has seen signs of life, and that it would have been entirely restored if her faith had been just a little stronger.

On a warrant sworn out by the State's Attorney at Morris, Ill., Newton Watts was arrested for complicity in the Rock Island train robbery and the murder of Messenger Nicholls in March of last year. He had charge of the baggage-car in which the safe was carried. It appears that the wife of Frank Jean Schwartz induced him to confess that he found a package of $7,000 under a seat in the smoking-car on the night following the robbery, and that he gave $5,000 of it to Newton Watts. The latter admits receiving the money, but claims that it has gone beyond his reach.

SOUTHERN.

In Green County, Kentucky, the body of John Smith was found wrapped in a blanket and concealed inside the carcass of a horse. It is supposed that he was murdered and his body concealed there by the murderer. Keith was a brother-in-law of William Deupass. He had been missing for several days, but no search had been made for him, his friends supposing that he was away on a visit, until a note belonging to William Deupass came into the house carrying something in his mouth, which, when examined, proved to be the hand of a man. Mr. Deupass tracked the dog to the carcass of an old horse, and was horrified to find the body of his brother-in-law therein, half eaten up by dogs. The mystery connected with the affair will probably never be solved.

Thirty-one persons were indicted for gambling at New Orleans last week, including Parker Harrison, Charles Bush, and Alex Brewster, who are well known to the sporting fraternity throughout the country.

The cotton crop is estimated at 6,640,000 bales.

For the first time in the history of New Orleans, the gambling houses are closed, to await the result of prosecutions.

Thomas M. Joseph, a prominent lawyer of Galveston, has disappeared. He has for ten years been Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, and his accounts are believed to be short from $12,000 to $20,000.

A duel was fought at New Orleans between Robert Roman and Sidney L. Theard, in which the Roman gladiator came out victorious, inflicting two nasty cuts in his opponent's hand. A reconciliation was then effected through the seconds.

The theaters and restaurants were the only public places in New Orleans open last Sunday, for the first time in the history of that city. The saloon men have decided to apply for an injunction against the gas and electric light companies.

WASHINGTON.

The Commissioner of Pensions has made requisition for $8,785,000 with which to make his March payments. This is the largest sum yet asked for any quarter.

A report has been made to the State Department by United States Consul J. C. Bacon of Montevideo, Uruguay, that an excellent market might be opened there for American cured pork and lard, as most inferior home-made ham and bacon sells there at from forty to fifty cents a pound. It is said that it would pay American shippers to open a market there and sell at about twenty-five to thirty cents a pound.

The Secretary of the Interior reports to the Senate that forty-four of the older Apache children at Fort Marion have been transferred to the Indian school at Carlisle, and that sixty of the younger ones are to be educated at St. Augustine by the Sisters of Charity at $17.50 each per quarter.

John Jameson has resigned the general superintendency of the Railway Mail Service. His successor is Thomas E. Nash, Chief Clerk of the Postoffice Department.

The President has allowed the act appropriating $600,000 a year to provide arms and equipments for the militia to become a law without his signature.

Secretary Manning called at the White House last week and placed his resignation in the hands of the President. The letter of resignation for the name of Mr. Manning's successor will probably not be made public for some time.

POLITICAL.

A bill to prohibit boycotts and attaching a penalty for the violation of the act, if adopted, of five years in the penitentiary or a fine of $2,000, or both, has been introduced in the Illinois Legislature.

A committee of architects appointed by the Minnesota House to investigate the condition of the Capitol reported that the roof is liable to fall in at any moment. An adjournment to Market Hall was immediately ordered.

Cassius M. Clay is still actively canvassing Kentucky for the Republican nomination for Governor.

The Oregon Legislature passed a bill over the Governor's veto authorizing the Oregon Navigation Company to construct a bridge at Portland.

A bill has been introduced in the Nebraska House to provide for the stamping of merchandise made in the Penitentiary.

A poll of the preferences of the members of the Pennsylvania Legislature gives the preference for President of the Democrats as Gov. Hill, and the Republicans J. G. Blaine, Smith M. Weed, of New York, who has been spoken of as Secretary Manning's successor, denies the report, and, speaking of the future, says Mr. Cleveland will not be a candidate for re-election.

The Nebraska House passed a bill providing for a bureau of industrial statistics.

An Indianapolis dispatch says: "David Turpie's certificate of election as United States Senator from Indiana was delivered to him to-day by the Governor, the Secretary of State having consented, on the advice of the Attorney General, to attest the signature of the Governor to the document, as the law makes this his duty. In a few days it is expected that his name is not to be regarded as an appendage of the Senate."

THE INDUSTRIAL OUTLOOK.

About fifteen hundred silk-dyers at Paterson, N. J., struck for $1 per week additional pay and a half-holiday.

Four hundred ore miners struck at Champion, Mich., demanding the removal of Captain John Sampson and his brother. There is much dissatisfaction in the district, and other strikes are impending.

A New York special says: "Except for the number of long-shoremen standing idle on the corners, the stoppage on the river fronts have assumed almost their normal appearance. Though it requires a larger number of men to do the work now than formerly, the steamboat and railroad pier managers all claim that business is as good as before the strike, and that freight is being moved with the utmost facility."

The Knights of Labor have purchased for their general headquarters a building on North Broad street, Philadelphia, for $65,000.

The strike of the longshoremen in New York having been declared off, there was a general rush of strikers to get back to work. The men in the docks claim it to have amounted to over $2,500,000, and they will use to withdraw from the organization that brought on the trouble. The Morgan line of boats, among others, refused to take the strikers back, and an attempt was made to fire its property.

RAILROAD INTELLIGENCE.

Officials of the St. Paul road report that the earnings for last year were 9½ per cent on the common stock, and that there will be a surplus of $1,000,000 after paying dividends.

The Lake Erie & Western Railroad Company has been incorporated by Chicago and New York capitalists, with a capital stock of $50,000,000.

The Federal Court at Indianapolis has entered a decree for the sale of the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Road within thirty days, the limit being $3,000,000. The mortgages aggregate $8,000,000.

It is reported that the Denver & Rio Grande Road is negotiating in London for funds to extend its track from Green River to Santa Cruz, eight hundred miles.

Mr. McBill, of the Iowa Railway Commission, expresses surprise that the question of the long and short haul has never been precipitated upon the board. He also states that the road to railway companies of fixing their own coal is kept a profound secret.

A circular has been issued by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company for $3,000,000 with which to construct one thousand miles of track in Kansas, Colorado, and California.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Great damage was done in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia by the gale last week. A number of buildings at Wheeling were unroofed. Several buildings were wrecked at Wooster, Ohio. The spire of the Lutheran Church was blown through the roof of the new Methodist. The tow boat, the Lutheran Church and many dwellings at Greensburg, Pa., were wrecked. The Third Presbyterian Church at Wheeling, W. Va., was unroofed, and the Mound City Hotel at Moundsville, W. Va., was partially destroyed. At Louisville, O., the cyclone unroofed the Catholic Church and convent and many houses, and leveled every fence and tree. No lives were lost, but the citizens were panic-stricken. Four Hungarians were killed at Tyrone, Pa., by the falling of a tree under which they had taken shelter.

The officials of British Columbia report a marked decrease in the arrival of Chinese immigrants, and that a large amount of money was recently sent by Americans in New York to China to secure less stringent fishery regulations.

FOREIGN.

Dr. Holub, the African explorer, his wife, and the entire party accompanying him, have been massacred by natives in the interior of the dark continent.

Egyptian securities rose 2 per cent in London on the rumor that a British protectorate was to be established over that country.

Mrs. Henry Wood, the English novelist, whose decease is announced, was born in Worcestershire in 1815, and inherited a literary taste from her father, a glove manufacturer named Thomas.

The Russian Mediterranean fleet has been ordered to Jaffa.

John Bright has written another letter criticising Mr. Gladstone's Irish policy.

The striking coal-miners in Scotland are resorting to many and desperate outrages.

In the House of Commons, Sir Michael Hicks Beach announced that moonlighters recently invaded three farm-houses in County Galway and blackened the hair of the women because they had been working to pulse.

The French Government is purchasing timber in Bohemia for the purpose of constructing barracks.

A possible disruption of the Liberal factions in England is now talked of.

The cholera has made its appearance in Moscow.

The Hotel Continental at Berlin was burned, and several persons perished. It was insured in 1884 at a cost of $1,250,000, and was largely patronized by Americans.

At the close of a meeting at Glasgow, which was addressed by socialist speakers on behalf of the Lanarc miners, the crowd pelted the mounted police with mud and stones. The police charged and scattered the mob.

It is announced that all forts in Belgium along the front or French frontier have received a complete war armament. The preparations for defense have been carried to the extent of mobilizing the troops.

The Fremdenblatt of Berlin tells Belgium that it is her duty to maintain her army and be ready to defend her frontiers, and that it would be unwise to expect upon the powers to guarantee her neutrality.

The Czar refuses to disclose his intention in case of a French war against Germany.

Greece has given to France permission to excavate Delphi for remains of the temple.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says that the Russian troops in Kasnigar and Kudja, and that 3,000 men are already assembled in those districts.

The Germans erected at Cummersdorf an exact model of the forts along the French frontier, and destroyed it in forty-eight hours by using a new explosive. A large number of men are engaged in strengthening the fortifications of Cadiz. The Austrian Government has quadrupled the staff of the Steyr rifle factory and given considerable work to other shops.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

The conferees representing the Senate and the House have finally reached an agreement concerning the pending bill for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, says a Washington dispatch. The bill passed by the Senate provides that the Mormon Church should be governed by trustees appointed by the President. That was an unwise provision, and in conference it has been rejected. The requirement that all marriages in Utah shall be matters of public and official record will assist prosecutors in the performance of their duty. The most important paragraphs of the bill as it now stands are those which repeal the charters of the Mormon Church and the Mormon Immigration Society, and instruct the Attorney General to proceed in the courts for the recovery of all the church property which was not acquired in accordance with the laws of the United States. Section 1890 of the Revised Statutes is as follows: "No corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes shall acquire or hold real estate in any Territory during the existence of the Territorial government of a greater value than $50,000; and all real estate acquired or held by such corporation or association contrary hereto shall be forfeited and ended to the United States."

The Senate Committee on Printing, by a vote of two to one, has decided to report favorably the nomination of Public Printer Benedict, and he will probably be confirmed.

The fight against him, says a Washington dispatch, has been made by the Democrats in the House, by local representatives, and the objections urged against him are of a character of a very personal nature. In the senate the fate of the law, which requires that the Public Printer shall be a practical printer, and that he has been the publisher of a country newspaper for two years, is not yet decided, never mind, as it is, although in his business he has spent his life in the employ of printers of any kind. He is a member of thirty persons from the town where he lived when he was a boy, and has been postmaster twice, and has dismissed odd and influential men, and has made a good postmaster. He has had the big hand to an unbounded extent, and, coming from a little country town to fill an office to be his for four years, the printing institution in the world, he has an idea that he owes it to his party, and the President of the United States, and William R. Carter, a cloak manufacturer of Boston, with liabilities of $25,000.

The Chicago Base Ball Club has released Kelly to the Boston Club for a consideration of $10,000. Kelly gets the regulation $2,000 salary in Boston, and $1,000 additional for his photograph.

Gen. Fitzhugh urges the members of the Grand Army to forward to Congressmen, by letters or resolutions, an expression of sentiment on the vote of the dependent parents pension bill.

It is alleged by the Toronto Standard that an association of iron-workers has been formed in Pittsburgh to assist the Liberal party in the Dominion in defeating Sir John A. Macdonald's Government, and that a large amount of money was recently sent by American Protectionists to Canada.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

MEMORIAL services in honor of the late General John A. Logan were held in the Senate on the 6th inst. The Senate chamber was packed with attentive listeners. Mrs. Logan and family being among the number. Fifteen members of the House of Representatives, with the sad news of the dead Senator, in the House of Representatives subjoined adjourned. Tributes to the memory of the departed Senator from Wisconsin were delivered by Representatives Rose Henderson of Illinois, Hazel, Pettibone, Hendersons of Iowa, and Brentwood of Kentucky. The House adjourned, and the Post Worth and Dawes of Illinois, and Hanna of Indiana Territory. The Senate then spent the day in the consideration of the Deficiency appropriation bill. The text of the amendment to the Senate Committee on Pensions, which was passed, is as follows: "Soldiers and sailors who served ninety days or more in the war of the rebellion, and who are now or may hereafter be found to be suffering from a disability not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, shall be entitled to pensions, which pensions shall be given for the performance of labor such a support as shall render them unable to do so. They must be dependent upon their daily labor for support.

"In the case of these conditions they shall be placed on the pension roll, and shall receive such total inability to proceed, and the subsistence of the family of any such soldier or sailor.

"It is hereby declared that the words last quoted, which follow the word 'support,' are used in the sense of the word 'sustain' in the law of June 27, 1882, and that the conditions presented in the present law are to be construed in the same way as the total inability provided for in the act of June 27, 1882, that is, the inability arising from disease or injury of the character specified in the previous parts of the section. It does not mean that the applicant must be a pauper or in the poorhouse, but it does mean that the prescribed conditions.

"Soldiers and sailors and physical disability spoken of in the act of June 27, 1882, entitled 'An act for the relief of dependent and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent for support,' are hereby defined to be:

"This is the first general bill that has been sanctioned by Congress since the close of the last civil war permitting pensions to the soldiers and sailors who served in that war upon the ground of their present disability, and also, and the entire absence of any injuries received by the comrades or the ties of the service.

"While it allows constant legislation since the close of the war has been concentrated, and the number of every possible injury received as a result of the service, and the number of every and with a great number of laws passed for the purposes have been administered, and the pensions have been paid, and the pensions have been given to the soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent for support, the pensioners of all classes were upon the rolls, and the number of pensioners of all classes, of the rebellion and their widows and dependents for the year ending June 30, 1885, was 345,125, and the amount paid for the payment of pensions, and the amount expended in the year ending June 30, 1885, was $56,000,000.

"While annually paying out such a vast sum of money, and the number of the pensioners by the bill under consideration is exactly 2 per cent of the number of the pensioners of the United States has been engaged, including, of course, the cost of the pensions, and the amount of the pensions of the act for per month, for as it is related to the number of the pensioners of the United States

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic state convention for the nomination of one Justice of the supreme court to serve eight years, one Justice of the supreme court to serve the unexpired term of January 1st, 1888, and two Regents of the University, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it, will be held at the Detroit opera house, Detroit, Mich., on Tuesday, March 27, at 11 o'clock, a. m.

A council of the rules adopted by the convention held in Detroit in 1884 shall be and is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for governor at the last general election and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 250 votes, but any county is entitled to at least one delegate. All delegates must be residents of the counties they represent.

I. M. WEBBER, Chairman.
JOHN MINER, Secretary.

Under the above call, Charlevoix county is entitled to four delegates, and Antrim three.

Democratic County Convention.

A Democratic county convention will be held at Mosher's hall in the village of Boyne City, on Friday, Feb. 25, 1887, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing delegates to the Democratic state convention, to be held at Detroit on Tuesday, March 1st, for the election of a secretary of the county committee, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention. The several townships will be entitled to the delegates to said convention as follows: Bear Lake, 1; Charlevoix, 2; Chandler, 1; Charlevoix, 4; Evangeline, 2; Eveline, 5; Hayes, 2; Hudson, 1; Marion, 2; Melrose, 1; Norwood, 2; Resort 1; South Arm, 2; Springvale, 1; Wilson, 2.

A. D. CRUICKSHANK, Chairman.

Michigan is likely to have two or more new counties during the present session of the legislature.

The Vetoed Pension Bill.

In the few places where the president's action in vetoing the dependent pension bill is seriously criticised it is assumed that he has done something which will prevent the deserving soldier who was wounded in battle or shattered by disease from receiving any assistance from the government which he served in the most arduous and perilous capacity. Nothing could be farther from the truth or more ridiculous. There are laws already in force under which soldiers of the late war who sustained any injury, even the slightest, either in field or camp, may secure pensions simply by applying at the bureau. Pensions are given for more than one hundred and twenty five causes, including every possible ill that a soldier or his dependent relatives could suffer. But the vetoed bill was not intended to cover these deserving cases. It was passed for the express purpose of bringing within the pale of pension legislation thousands of men who never sustained an injury of any kind in the service, men who never got south of the Ohio river, men who never fired a gun, as thousands of enlisted troops did not, and men who, having enlisted for three months, perhaps when the war was already over, receiving big bounties and, incurring no hardship, may now be suffering from any of the ills which all flesh is heir to, but not one of which is properly traceable to their brief military service.

Pumping up tears in behalf of the deserving soldier is therefore entirely out of place in this instance. The soldier who lost a little finger or contracted a chronic stomachache in the field can secure a pension by applying for it. No new law is necessary for him. All he need do is ask and he will receive. The vetoed bill was intended to cover the cases of those who make no pretense that they were injured in the service. It was designed to give pensions to men who are poor or who want them. It threw down the bars and leveled all distinction between the honored veteran bearing wounds received in his country's defense and the mere pretender and vagabond who, growing weary of supporting himself, asks the government to do it for him. The country, and especially the soldiers who saw service, are not prepared to wipe out the distinctions which existing laws make on this subject.—Chicago Herald.

Railroad Notes.

And now Traverse City wants the the D. C. & E. R. R., and in order to make capital frist tries to throw cold water on the proposed route via. Kalkaska, and especially that portion of it between this place and Grayling. True a small portion of the route east of its crossing "plains," but by far the major portion of the line through this country is through as fine a section of country as Traverse or any other northern county can boast of. Again, Charlevoix understands its own best interests too well to be led astray by specious arguments of Traverse City, or to allow itself to be located at the tail end of a spur of the G. R. & I. R. R. The people at that end of the route are not in the position of the old maid who wanted a husband and was willing to take "Most anybody, good Lord." On the contrary, they are in a position to demand what they want, and moreover, get it; and being sure of a road anyway, they are not foolish enough to want to put themselves at the end of a one horse extension when they can be at the terminus of a line that will intersect both the G. R. & I. and the Michigan Central, giving the competing lines to the east and south with almost a certainty of securing the Chicago & West Michigan, later, as well.—Kalkaska Leader.

On Tuesday a delegation of citizens from Bellaire and Kalkaska were here to take part in the railroad negotiations, and additional stock was taken, and the organization finally completed with a new board of directors and officers, as follows: A. D. Cruickshank, John Nicholls, J. Milo Eaton, F. J. Meech, and E. H. Dixon, of Charlevoix; R. M. Cherrie and E. A. Lewis, of Ironton; Roswell Leavitt, of Bellaire; A. G. Drake, W. H. Pipp, and A. A. Bleahy, of Kalkaska. The board of directors elected the following officers: President, R. M. Cherrie; vice president, A. A. Bleahy; secretary, J. Milo Eaton; treasurer, F. J. Meech; attorney, A. D. Cruickshank. The company is now ready for business, and expect to proceed at once to secure the right of way, and the necessary means for the construction of the road.

A Warning.

Pain is given for the wise purpose of informing us of the presence of danger and disturbing little excitement of an unusual nature disturbs the balance of the system, the nerve energies are exhausted, and headache and another other disturbances are the result. Many of the miseries of modern man and woman would be cured and prevented were their origin in derangements of the liver, blood, dyspepsia, jaundice, indigestion, costiveness and other unwholesome conditions. For a disease nature find a certain cure by use of Golden Seal Bitters. In this medicine nature, aided by art, has produced a rare combination of medicinal properties, wisely adapted to the cure of diseases common to mankind. The vitalizing principals embodied in Golden Seal Bitters will assuredly cure the broken down dyspeptic. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co, Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of this town: "I am 72 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and was able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, only 50c, at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store.

Broken Down Invalids.

Probably never in the history of cough medicines has any article met success equal to that which has been showered upon Dr. Pete's Magic Cough Cure. Thousands of hopeless cases of coughs, colds, and consumption have yielded to this truly miraculous discovery. For this reason we feel warranted in risking our reputation and money on its merits. Sold by Perry Weed and Dr. G. W. Crouter.

It is a good rule to accept only such medicines as are known to be worthy of confidence. It has been the experience of thousands that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the best medicine ever used for throat and lung diseases.

AYER'S Sugar-Coated Cathartic PILLS.

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and Colonel Cook's family have found them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gunther, Newburgh, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my face, for which of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the first got worse or the second sick. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Euling, Richmond, Va.

J. L. Newberry, of Petoskey, was one of our callers on Tuesday.

Dr. G. W. Crouter promises copy for a new advertisement next week.

John Burns and wife returned home Friday from their visit to Canada.

Note change of advertisement in the Pine Lake Iron Company's space this week.

Will Aldrich is home from Chicago, visiting relatives and friends in Charlevoix.

Al. Washburn returned on Saturday from his trip to Cadillac and Detroit.

Most of the Charlevoix attorneys are in Boyne City this week, attending court.

The Charlevoix ministrels are practicing for an entertainment in the near future.

Rev. C. F. Van Anken writes that he will be in Charlevoix again in a couple of weeks.

Mike Litney and wife returned from their visit with friends at Sutton's Bay last Friday.

G. W. Bell reports engagements for rebuilding and removing cottage on the resort in the spring.

H. W. Page, of Kalamazoo, arrived last Friday, to look after matters pertaining to the welfare of the resort.

The ladies of the M. E. church will give a ten cent tea at the church next Monday evening. Supper for all that come.

Amos Fox's gray pony took a run in Bridge street last Saturday, scattering the cutter along the street by pieces.

John Linn and L. Price left yesterday for Bayfield, Wis., where they will work in a factory the balance of the winter.

Frank M. Harris and Miss Jennie Bailey, both of Eastport, were married by Rev. E. H. Whitman, at Norwood, on the 22d.

The Old Settlers' Association of the Grand Traverse region, will hold its annual meeting at the town hall, Elk Rapids, March 1, 1887.

W. P. Brown and wife, and his father, P. K. Brown, went to Grayling, N. Y., last week, and will visit other Eastern cities before their return.

The sugar season is again at hand, and I. D. Bartholomew & Co., have something to say, of interest to all sugar-makers. Don't forget them when ordering supplies.

Wesley Emery, of Lansing, was in town Wednesday, in the interest of the state reading circle, of which society he is state agent, and visited the county and local reading circles.

Band of Hope next Saturday, at three o'clock p. m. Children are invited to attend. Please come and fill the hall. The meetings can not be made interesting unless the people turn out.

Al Washburn's excellence as a wood engraver is again shown in the new advertisement of F. W. Craine & Co. And the whole advertisement is worthy your attention. The large stock of new goods received this week is worth reading many miles to see.

The regular monthly temperance meeting at Greer's hall on Monday evening was well attended and was addressed by the several pastors of the town, and by a number of our citizens, on the question of temperance. Mr. Bartholomew, Friday evening, Feb. 25, 1887. The paper will be by Mrs. A. T. Waterman, on "The Religions of Persia."

Wesley Emery, of Lansing, Mich., state agent of the reading circle, contracted with the school board yesterday for a set of anatomical charts for the schools, showing the effect of alcohol and tobacco on the human system.

At the democratic caucus Monday evening, A. D. Cruickshank, J. Milo Eaton, L. D. Bartholomew, C. J. Grier, Geo. W. Miller and Mike Litney were elected as delegates to the county convention, to be held at Boyne City tomorrow.

Dr. G. W. Crouter arrived home Sunday from the grand lodge I. O. O. F. He was raised up a step in the affairs of the society, coming home with the honors of grand marshal. Thus Charlevoix continues to be represented in the affairs of the state, so far as that society is concerned.

Rev. C. F. VanAnken, who for the past three weeks has conducted a very successful series of revival meetings at the Congregational church, closed his meetings Sunday night, there having been eleven persons added to the church that day, making 47 in all since the meetings were inaugurated. Rev. VanAnken seems to be specially fitted for the work he is engaged in, and wherever he goes he will have the God speed of the many warm friends he made during his stay in Nashville. He is now at Freeport.—Nashville News.

The masquerade at the opera house on the 22d was a great success socially and financially, and footed the reading room a nice little sum. The object and prices drew a large and orderly crowd, and the prizes offered created more of an interest in handsome and appropriate costumes than ever before had in Charlevoix. The prizes were awarded to Miss Annie McLeod, representing a costume "one hundred years ago," and to Wm. Cross as "the fat boy." The supper at the Bridge Street House was satisfactory in every respect, and reflects great credit on Mr. and Mrs. Campbell.

The Michigan State Reading Circle, of which Mr. Wesley Emery, of Lansing is state agent, proposes to give teachers all over the state a course of reading and study almost equivalent to a normal course, and at only a nominal cost. Mr. Emery tells us that in many localities in the southern part of the state a certificate of proficiency from the state circle is all that is necessary to secure a school,—their examinations requiring a more through training than some county examinations. Local circles have been organized in Boyne Falls, Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix. The teachers all over the country are taking hold of it with profit to themselves, and of course to the advantage of the general public.

With the coming of spring and the opening of travel, our friends should make an effort in their respective localities to increase the circulation and popularity of the JOURNAL. A little effort on the part of each subscriber to procure at least one more subscriber, would soon double our list, and enable us to make improvements not now possible. It is the aim of the publisher to make the JOURNAL the most complete and thorough local newspaper in the county, and with the aid of our correspondents make it a record of the transactions of the whole county. We desire correspondents in localities not now represented, who will carefully and correctly report business transactions and personals of a nature to interest all in their vicinity.

"If this sort of weather keeps up much longer," said a tar at the Lumber Exchange yesterday, "navigation will open within five weeks. We got a dispatch here the other day saying that the ice in the straits was getting rotten and breaking up. Nearly all the ice has disappeared from this end of the lake, and from what we can learn from the other shore the same is true over there. There is more or less ice farther up the lake, but these heavy rains must be chopping it up at a lively rate. Should navigation open in the latter part of March vesselmen will have a chance to make some money during the year, and reimburse themselves for the many losses they have sustained in the past few years. Looking over the situation at this early day, I have no hesitancy in saying that vessel interests were never brighter."—Chicago Herald.

Historical Society.

Notwithstanding the storm a goodly number of the Historical Society met at the home of Mrs. Ainslie on Friday evening last, and passed a season of literary and social enjoyment.

Mr. Robert Miller read a very creditable paper upon the French Revolution.

Mrs. O. S. Washburn read an interesting selection and Mae Waterbury gave a recitation.

The music as furnished by Miss Kissner, Miss Carrie Hilton, the Misses Ainslie, Messrs. Wheat and Kanagy and Dr. Perry was novel and pleasing.

The society will meet at the residence of I. D. Bartholomew, Friday evening, Feb. 25, 1887. The paper will be by Mrs. A. T. Waterman, on "The Religions of Persia."

M. E. Church.

Teachers' meeting grows in numbers and interest. Every Tuesday evening these workers meet to sharpen their weapons and get ready for a more vigorous successful prosecution of the work to which God and the church has called them.

On Thursday of this week, a county convention of W. C. T. U. will be held in our church, to which all are invited. Services begin at 2 and 7 p. m.

On Saturday, at 2 p. m., there will be preaching service, after which the quarterly conference will meet for the usual business session.

On Sabbath morning the love feast will begin at 9.30, preaching at 10.30, after which the sacrament of the Lord's supper will be administered. Please come up to this feast and renew your covenant with God, your Father. Jesus expects every one to do their duty. W. H. MCCARTHY, Pastor.

The Sphinx and New Discoveries.

The sphinx occupies a position where the encroachment of the desert is most conspicuous. At the present day nothing is to be seen of the animal except its head and its neck; but the old Egyptian monuments on which it is figured show not only the entire body down to the paws, but also a large square plinth beneath, covered with ornaments. Since the time of the Greeks, perhaps even since the reign of Thothmes IV., this plinth has disappeared beneath the sand, and its very existence has been forgotten. It is generally supposed that the sphinx is hewn out of a large isolated rock, which overlooked the plain. But M. Maspero's researches suggest that the sphinx is hewn out of a large block cut of which the sphinx was finally carried on will doubtless verify the existence of the plinth shown on the old paintings, and also show evidence, by the ornamentation of the plinth, of the true age of the monument. M. Maspero is inclined to assign to it a very great antiquity—possibly higher than the early dynasties—i. e., than the first period of Egyptian history. As the result of last winter's work the sand round the sphinx has already been lowered by about thirty meters.—The Academy.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower, will make them free from disease, as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent of such maladies as Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the Head, Palpitation of the Heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. 20w1

A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, Schr. Weyssouth, plying between Atlantic City and New York, had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only gave him instant relief, but allayed the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were similarly affected and a single dose had the same happy effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the standard remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner. Free trial bottles of this standard remedy at Dr. G. W. Crouter's drug store. 4

FOR ONE DOLLAR.

We are frequently asked by people when subscribing for some city paper why we don't put the price of the JOURNAL down to One Dollar per year. In reply, we cannot undertake to compete with a city paper which is printed with perfect machinery by the ten thousand or hundred thousand. It costs just as much to prepare a newspaper form for the press for one hundred copies as it does for ten thousand copies. A local newspaper seldom expects to extend its circulation beyond a few hundred copies per week, while the city paper which counts its readers by the ten thousand or hundred thousand is generally of very little or no value for local news.

To accommodate those who want a city paper and a local paper, and don't want to pay but one dollar each, if they will bring us the cash and pay for both in advance at one time we will furnish the JOURNAL at the rate of one dollar a year. That is, for Two Dollars cash in advance, we will send the JOURNAL and either the Detroit Weekly Free Press, Chicago Weekly News, Herald, Inter Ocean, Toledo Blade, National Tribune, New York Weekly World, Montreal Weekly Herald and Star, or in fact almost any city weekly usually sold for one dollar a year.

We are able to do this because with the above papers we have special clubbing arrangements by which we receive those papers at a reduction from the regular rate. Their reduction allows us a profit.

Subscribers must remember however, that this is a strictly cash-in-advance rate, and all subscriptions now in arrears must be paid up in full at regular rates, and one year in advance at the reduced rate, to secure the benefits of the arrangement.

LOVE'S CALL.

BY JENNIE E. OWEN.

The day had softly crept away,
And I sat a-dying in the west,
And gazing upward to the east,
A brilliant crescent on her breast.

The cowpt-house clock had struck the hour,
The clear tones sounded far and near
Above city streets,
And fell like music on the ear.

Like sweet music, for that sound
Had set a thousand workmen free,
And those who loved were hasting home,
The objects of their love to see.

The wife was waiting for her lord,
The children ran to meet their sire;
All hearts were filled with music soft,
Waked from the depths of love's sweet lyre.

But one whose heart was light and gay
Was coming swiftly down the street,
His face reflecting all his heart,
And whistling soft a love song sweet.

"Will you be out to-night, my love?
Up from your window I will hear its lilt:
Give me a song from a bird's throat,
The gentle cadence sinks and swells—

Rises and floats upon the air
Like a bird's wonderful calling song
When he is wooing his pretty mate
The lady branches from among."

And, writing as a little bird
Chirping to woo his pretty mate,
Dear Maudie, gave a tender song,
Comes tripping lightly to the gate.

For love is quick to catch love's call,
And quick to answer, and to hear
Whatever the heart may wish and call,
Or birds the twiny boughs among.

The Story of a Spy.

Our army in the Shenandoah Valley was hampered by the trouble, that always attends campaigning in a hostile country. Probably three-fourths of the population were friendly to the Confederacy; many of those who were friendly to the Union did not dare to make their friendship known. Thousands of soldiers in Early's army had their homes and their families in the valley. At all seasons, when there was an active campaign in progress, and when there was a lull in military operations, some of these men would visit their homes, often taking the most daring risks in doing so. It was so easy to conceal them when suspicion was aroused and search made by our forces, that detection and capture were rare. Three or four instances I recall when spies were discovered and summarily executed, but each of these instances was in the heat of the campaign, when the army was on the march, and it was felt by those in authority that if the offender was not then and there hung he never would be. In fact the justice of the drum-head court-martial in the army was generally sounded, and well administered. None but the most flagrant cases were punished in this way, the innocent were not likely even to be brought before this stern tribunal.

When it is added that in General Early's army there were some other thousands of soldiers, young men who had left their sweethearts in the valley, and who were literally dying to visit them, and about ready to go through fire and water for that purpose, it will be seen that, if Early did not have the most correct information from all these sources of the numbers and movements of our army, then he did not avail himself of the means that were ready to his hand.

That he always did have pretty accurate information of these subjects, the plain history of the campaign will show.

The story was waiting for her lord.

The children ran to meet their sire;
All hearts were filled with music soft,
Waked from the depths of love's sweet lyre.

But one whose heart was light and gay
Was coming swiftly down the street,

The Story of a Spy.

Our army in the Shenandoah Valley was hampered by the trouble, that always attends campaigning in a hostile country. Probably three-fourths of the population were friendly to the Confederacy; many of those who were friendly to the Union did not dare to make their friendship known. Thousands of soldiers in Early's army had their homes and their families in the valley. At all seasons, when there was an active campaign in progress, and when there was a lull in military operations, some of these men would visit their homes, often taking the most daring risks in doing so. It was so easy to conceal them when suspicion was aroused and search made by our forces, that detection and capture were rare. Three or four instances I recall when spies were discovered and summarily executed, but each of these instances was in the heat of the campaign, when the army was on the march, and it was felt by those in authority that if the offender was not then and there hung he never would be. In fact the justice of the drum-head court-martial in the army was generally sounded, and well administered. None but the most flagrant cases were punished in this way, the innocent were not likely even to be brought before this stern tribunal.

When it is added that in General Early's army there were some other thousands of soldiers, young men who had left their sweethearts in the valley, and who were literally dying to visit them, and about ready to go through fire and water for that purpose, it will be seen that, if Early did not have the most correct information from all these sources of the numbers and movements of our army, then he did not avail himself of the means that were ready to his hand.

That he always did have pretty accurate information of these subjects, the plain history of the campaign will show.

After leaving it to rebate the story that I begun to tell, which naturally grows out of it, of the adventures and fate of a Confederate spy, it should be said that the Union people in the valley, if in a great minority, were both eager and willing to render any service to the cause that was consistent with their safety; and that upon many occasions General Sheridan received the most valuable information from them, which he publicly acknowledged after the war. The case of Rebecca Wright, at Winchester, is the most conspicuous example of this, and deserves to be kept prominently before the people. Tobey is to be directly credited the great service of sending at great risk to General Sheridan the information upon which he fought the victorious battle of Winchester. Having been myself in that fight, and being sincerely anxious to know if her share in the business was as great and as creditable as was reported, I not long since addressed a letter to her on the subject. The reply came from Washington, informing me that the story was substantially true. The lady has for some time been Mrs. Rebecca Bossall, and fills a place in the Treasury Department, which General Sheridan procured for her, besides presenting her with a handsome gold watch. In September, 1864, she was living at Winchester, which was then within the enemy's lines. Her character as an Union woman had been reported to Sheridan by his spies and he succeeded in getting a message to her, asking her to ascertain and send him word what the strength of Early's army was, in each arm. For an attractive young lady who was indeed by acquaintance among the Confederate officers, this was not a hard thing to do—at least so far as securing the information was concerned; and the gallant officer in gray and gold lace who one afternoon called upon Miss Wright and innocently answered her questions by telling her the whole number of Early's infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and added, in the fullness of his confidence, that two divisions would march to Bunker Hill, several miles north, the next day—that gentleman had not the faintest suspicion that Miss Wright would be in possession of this previous information the same night! But it was one thing to get the information, and another to send it through the well-picketed lines of the Confederate army to Sheridan, at Berryville, twelve miles away. How could it be done? There was just one way that seemed practicable, and Miss Wright adopted it. The information was written by her on bond on thin paper, with all necessary detail, wadded up in a little ball, inclosed in silver leaf, and placed in the cheek of a faithful negro. Some plausible story was invented, to account for the visit of the latter to go beyond the line; a strict examination failed to disclose anything suspicious, and he appeared as perfectly stupid that he was allowed to pass. He was at Sheridan's headquarters in four hours, and that General explicitly tells us that the information he received in this express way was that which justified him in taking the aggressive and bringing on the battle which resulted so gloriously for the Union cause.

But all this is merely incidental to the subject. I begin to relate the interesting story of a Confederate spy, and we will return to it.

In that cold and dreary Virginia winter of 1864-5, our troops in the Shenandoah Valley were quartered in and about Winchester. There who were outside of that place constituted log huts with fire-places, and, Baltimore being less than one hundred miles off, they were able to procure such articles as made them quite comfortable. There was little duty to be done in this station, and, therefore, writing letters, playing cards, reading the papers, and predicting how much longer the war would last, became the stock methods of employing the time. Furloughs and leaves for thirty days were liberally granted, and many went home for a brief visit, to their military experience to wondering ears, and return with a new stock of hope and patience with which to "see it out."

An incident that somewhat concerns the story I have now to tell was the review by Sheridan of ten thousand cavalry in the last of that February. It took place on a level plain near Winchester, and was attended by about every officer and man who was not on duty, as well as half the population of the little city. It was a magnificent spectacle, exceeded only in splendor by the great review of the armies which closed the war in the following May at Washington. The line of horsemen was so long that it was doubled back into columns on each flank, and the continued and prolonged burst of music from the splendid cavalry bands, as the General and his staff rode around it, was inspiriting in the extreme. The writer was in a reverie when him occupied more than an hour, and the little chief seemed to know his ability to giant proportions with pride as he sat his black pacer and impressed the soldiers. What he did with these men has become history. In the sun and frost he pushed far up the valley to Rockish Gap, where they literally rode over the disorganized fragments of an army that Early had gathered there, capturing most of them, and sending them back to Winchester, and then striking over the mountain to the southeast, destroying canals and railroads, and burning Great or City Point for the final work.

I saw the middle portion of this raid, as they were corralled together by the Provost Marshal, and was highly edified by the talk of some of them. One came! fellow gave a graphic summary of the affair in the shed this language.

"Why, we uns was there in the gap, and we was goin' to fight you uns; but you uns came round in hell-fired haste and whipped uns up yest'ldy so many kervis'n's."

It was late one night in that January, when several of Emory's staff were sitting up in one of our log huts at Stevenson's Station, three miles north of Winchester, when a negro was brought in by a corporal of the guard. He was anxious to see "Mass General Sheridan," but was generally convinced that if he had anything of importance to tell he had better let us have it.

His mission was indeed important, if his story was true. He was living at Bunker Hill, about twelve miles north, and was "a Linkum nigger." There was an old man named Link living there, who sympathized with the Confederacy, and whose only son was in Early's army. Before daylight that morning had sent a man by the name of Jones, who was a spy for Early, to Winchester, while his horse was put in the barn. The negro had slily watched the proceedings all day, and he believed both man and horse were there yet.

"Well, uncle, what of it?" our Provost Marshal asked.

"I think he's young Mas' Link, sah."

"Nonsense! We have had spies here, through our pickets, from away off near Gordonsville!"

The negro expressed the opinion that he had been the first to come around the mountains at the west, and come in that way.

"I suppose that might be, but what's his object?"

"He's a spy, sah."

"Of course he is—if he's the man; but suppose you write down his name for us, for good of the service. Has he a mother alive?"

"No, sah."

"Sisters?" I doubt if he's from Early's army. A man wouldn't come all that distance and risk his life merely to see his folks."

The darky's face wore a broad grin as he answered that there was a young woman living at old Link's house who, he guessed, was engaged.

"Now you do talk!" said the officer. "A young fellow will go through fire and water to see his sweetheart. The promises to be important. Stay here, and I'll see about it."

He went out, and in fifteen minutes was back with authority from the General to try to make the capture, and to take whatever he wanted for that purpose.

It only one were all clamorous to go; but the Provost Marshal thought it necessary to take only one officer beside himself and a dozen mounted orderlies, all well armed. The negro, of course, went along as a guide.

I was out of this little expedition, and I awaited the result with much interest. It was entirely successful. Shortly after dark the party returned, bringing the prisoner on the house which the negro had ridden away. He was an athletic, manly looking fellow of about twenty-two. He was very pale and much agitated now, though he did his best to keep up a bold demeanor.

Over our mess-table at breakfast that morning, the Provost Marshal related his adventure.

"It was about two o'clock in the morning when we got to Bunker Hill. The negro pointed out the house, and unobtrusively made himself scarce, in which he was quite right, as probably within an hour he had him to have any of those people discover his agency in this business—or, rather, as it was, there was a light in the rear part of the house. I surrounded the building with nine men, posted another at the stable-door, and, with the Lieutenant and the other two, rapped at the back door. The light was out in a twinkling. We hammered at the door till one came to the door a window and demanded our business.

"We want to speak to you.

"You shan't.

"We shall! We're soldiers from Stevenson's, and have orders to search this house."

"He became quite wild on hearing this, but begged us to go away and not make a disturbance, for there was nobody in the house but 'me and Sue.'

"I was fast getting out of patience, and was not polite at all. I intimated to the proprietor, whose red night-cap was stuck out of the window where, that he was confounded old secesh liar. I think I put it strongly, but this will do, and that he didn't open that door forthwith I'd burst it off its hinges. So down he came with a light, and admitted us—and what do you think? There sat, as you had a set for fifteen minutes in the dark, Mr. a Sue, looking very much frightened and trembly as all over."

Somebody interrupted the narrative to ask if she was handsome.

"I suppose so! I didn't stop to study her up and find out. No doubt that unfortunate young fellow in the guard-house thinks she is. We went right to business. 'Miss,' I said, 'I'm sorry to trouble you, but we want young Link. Just produce him.'

"'O, he's not here, sir; indeed he's not!'

"'He was seen to come into this house early yesterday morning.'

"She hesitated an instant to shape her next little lie in the most plausible way.

"'So he did, sir. I won't deny it. But he was away about noon.'

"'What's his horse doing in the barn, then, at this moment?' I asked, at a venture.

"That shot told. She sank down all in a heap on the floor, crying and wringing her hands, and imploring us not to hurt Tom.

"It was now, of course, merely a question of making a thorough search of the house, and would it pay to attempt it? I struck the right place the very first thing. Up against the wall of this room stood one of the great lumbering clothes-presses that we see sometimes in this country. I tried the knob, but could not open it. I drew my pistol and said in a loud voice that I was going to send three or four bullets into that press. The girl screamed, the door opened, and out walked Mr. Tom Link, dressed in a rough homespun suit.

"'I surrender, he said. 'Here's my pistol.'

"'But I want you to understand that I'm not a spy.'

"'You'll have to talk to General Sheridan about that,' I said; and in ten minutes after such a scene between him and the girl as made me feel very uncomfortable, we had him mounted and riding to camp."

"You can see me, I am his Secretary," said Latouchere.

"Tell I want to see the Minister," said the Congressman.

"The Minister is not in."

"All right, I'll wait for him."

"Certainly, sir; have a seat."

The Congressman took a chair and a newspaper, lighted a cigar and settled down for a comfortable time of it. An hour passed. He turned to Latouchere, who sat reading a novel, and said:

"Do you know when he will be back?"

"I do not," was the curt reply. The Congressman lighted another cigar and strolled about the office until another hour was gone.

"Do you think he will be back this evening?"

"Hardly."

"To-morrow?"

"I guess not."

"Well, when will he probably be here?"

"Really, sir, I cannot tell you. The Minister sailed for England yesterday and did not indicate when he intended to return," replied Latouchere, without lifting his eyes from his book.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE "earthshine" which we see on the unilluminated part of the moon moon is a reflection of sunlight from the earth, which is then at the "full" as seen from the moon. The apparent diminution in size of the dimly illuminated part is due to an optical illusion known as irradiation.

The Young Milton.

Most people seem to experience an odd difficulty in realizing that the very greatest personages of the past ever were young. Yet this conception is necessary, if we wish to see them as they really were, and not according to the text-books and other sources of illusory tradition. Milton, for instance, who does not think of him habitually as the "blind old bard?" To test this, let any one arrange to have the name brought suddenly before the attention at an odd moment and see what kind of image presents itself to the image nature in response to the word. Ten to one it will prove to be a venerable but sightless and piteous figure, a confused mixture of several superimposed images, of which the most prominent may be some dolorous frontispiece engraving of a stoop-shouldered man, of the blind, pathetic form in Munkacsy's vivid group. It needs but an instant's reflection to see that this is a very inadequate and unfortunate conception of the actual Milton in his best days. "Why, he was a little man, and blind when the two Paradises were committed to paper, but not when they were first conceived in his creative brain. And what of that long period of his middle manhood, when he was not only poet but statesman, diplomatist, and latterly a writer for free thought and free government—an erect, active figure, as full of fire and fire as any trooper of them all? What of the still earlier days, when the beautiful young fellow charmed the hearts of man and maid, "conning at fence," in the literal sense as well as in all the elegant intricacies of Italian sonnetteering and polished statecraft? For my part, I like best to remember the outward aspect of Milton as he appears in Vertue's engraving from the Onslow portrait at the age of 21. A young gentleman, with laugh big, dark, gray, eyes, and fresh, manly face; full of the sap so soon to mature into the tough oak that helped—be more than almost any man, if we consider his having been both brain and pen to Cromwell, besides his own incessant prose polemics on the side of freedom—to wrestle out our modern liberties in that fugue tune of the great revolution. It was at just the time of this lovely boy-portrait that he was writing to his college-mate: "Nothing sweet poetry are not incompatible. Why should it be different with you? But, indeed, one sees the triple influence of Jove, Apollo, and Ceres in the verses you have sent me." And then, lower down, in the harp lightly touched by nimble hands, and the lute giving time to the dance, and the flying feet of the delicated room? Believe me, where the lyre keys leap and the accompanying dance goes round the perfumed hall, there will the sweet-pipe be."

The teachers of literature might well make some effort to rehabilitate these long imagined verities of the past, to remove from them the disguises of age and sorrow that a too reverent tradition has thrown about them, and to present them in that bloom of manhood belonging to the period of their greatest activity. If I were a professor of literature I should desire to hang my lecture-room with pictures—not of the old traditional and forbidding decepitudes, but of Milton, for example, as the charming young swordsman, with velvet cloak tossed back from the rapier in hand; of Homer, no longer blind and prematurely aged, as it were, with our modern perplexities in the matter of the Iliad, but the splendid young Greek, in the best sense of the word, and weaponed like his own youthful vision of Achilles.—Boston Post.

New England English.

The same Englishwoman told the Athenian of an amusing experience she had on her first arrival. Coming on her own part shortly after she came to this country, a few months ago. She kindly volunteered to serve for a night as amateur nurse for a sick friend. The patient was so weak that she could barely whisper a word or two to tell her her pain. And what of that long period of his middle manhood, when he was not only poet but statesman, diplomatist, and latterly a writer for free thought and free government—an erect, active figure, as full of fire and fire as any trooper of them all? What of the still earlier days, when the beautiful young fellow charmed the hearts of man and maid, "conning at fence," in the literal sense as well as in all the elegant intricacies of Italian sonnetteering and polished statecraft? When you visit or leave New York City, save baggage, expressage, and $2 carriage hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot.

$3 rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplies every taste at popular prices. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Ivory for Knife Handles.

The ivory used for fine table-knives as well as for other purposes, comes wholly from the great ivory mart of London, and is the tusks of the elephant or of his fossil congener, the mammoth. The ivory for knives is saved by reciprocating saws, fed with water, and is then exposed for several days to the sunlight, under glass, to bleach it. The handles are weighted of them, and the hole in which the wire and the tang of the blade are placed is lined with a white cement, to prevent the dark metal from showing through the semi-transparent ivory. Before the handles receive their final finish they are smoked and a scraper is run over them to detect any slight depressions. They are finished with writing on soft felt wheels.

An English inventor claims that the grip of a pulley on belting may be increased by covering the pulley with a thin, metallic cover, fastened by screws, rivets, or solder. Among other advantages, it is said that the strength of the pulley is materially increased, the hold of the belt improved, and it is possible to run with slacker belts.

Is There a Cure for Consumption!

We answer unreservedly, yes! If the patient comes early, and uses long the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," and exercises proper care. If allowed to run in course too long, all medicine is a question to stay it. Dr. Pierce never deceives, nor holds out false hope for the sake of pecuniary gain. The "Golden Medical Discovery" has cured thousands of patients when nothing else seemed to avail. Your druggist has it. Send two stamps for Dr. Pierce's complete treatise on consumption, with numerous testimonials. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

A good bread is to be made woman must be bred to make it.

THOUSANDS of women bless the day on which Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" was made known to them. In all those derangements causing backache, dragging pain, nervousness, nervous and general debility, it is a sovereign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value in those suffering from "internal fever" congestion, inflammation, or ulceration. By druggists.

IT'S very curious, but doctors never seem to know anybody well.—Burlington Free Press.

DR. PIERCE'S "Pellets"—the original "Little Liver Pills"—treat constipation, sick and bilious headaches, sour stomach, and bilious attacks. By druggists.

The Children's Peril.

BY PROF. G. E. FOSTER.

An army is marching through a strange country—company after company, regiment in the wake of regiment. A defile is approached with entrance narrow, and walled with towering, precipitous rocks; then, slightly opening out, only to close again, to an equally narrow egress. The first company enters, advances, and suddenly finds itself in the midst of a numerous ambush, from which no man escapes. The second company approaches, and yet the scouts who watched from the cliffs above, and saw the destruction of the first company, raise no warning cry, order no halt. What should we think of that criminal carelessness which thus suffered regiment after regiment to encounter the dread fate of their predecessors?

Behold another and truer picture: —Away yonder, along the low banks which skirt the river of death, weteo—e crowding victims of drink—Anglo-Saxons all. More than 1,000,000 drunkards, stamped with the marks of debauchery! There is the wan and haggard face, there the blood-shot eyes, there the bloated features, there the unsteady tramp, the staggering form, the prostrate body of men, women—age, and little children—changed from strength and beauty and innocence by the accursed wizery of intemperance. There gibber and stare more than 20,000 lunatics and idiots, made so by strong drink. Gaze upon their vacant faces, their scowling features, their maniac contortions, and listen to their wild ravings, and their strange babblings. The temple of the mind has been robbed of its altar fires, and filled with unutterable darkness. There shiver and plead the more than million pampers, who have sold plenty to appease the greed of strong drink, and now go hand in hand with cold and cheerless poverty. There drag their lazy nasadeen more than fifty thousand hardened criminals, lured from innocence and purity by the fiend of rum. Justice stands over them with her knotted lash, remorse gnaws with sharp beak at their hearts. Afar off follow a vast multitude of wives and mothers, husbands and brothers, friends and little children—a mournful procession, beholding the ruin of their loved ones, but powerless to do aught except to plead or pray. And as we look, every few moments one of the long line of unfortunates plunges into the dark river, and disappears from view.

Twenty years this side of that dark river bank, with its crowded ruined ones, behold the rising ground of life. It is studded with temples devoted to three great idols—Home Drinking, Social Treating, King Dramshop. There is the home board, with its hanged spread, the shining glasses, the sparkling wines and foaming ingoer, and children's lips be sip the specious solvent, as children's eyes follow the movements of fathers and friends. There is the merry company of friends and acquaintances—they shake hands, they bow down before the idol of Social Treating; they mingle wine and touch glasses, and the sounds of uproarious mirth float out from the spacious temple. There is King Dram shop, crowded by the slate, sitting entranced upon the jaw books, guarded by government, petted by potentates, and into his 400,000 temples enter the daily throngs of worshipers—youths, maidens, men and women in life's prime, silver haired age, and bending decrepitude. Low they bow before him, fill his coffers with grateful offerings, and sacrifice the purest and best to his honor.

And as we gaze, lo! out of these temples of Home Drinking, Social Treating, and King Dramshop, pass the steady throng which divides along two paths of drunkenness, insanity, pauperism, crime and misery, and goes continually to swell the ruined millions yonder, beside the dark river of death. No one plunges into the terrible flood whose place is not speedily taken by some worshiper from those three temples. Now turn to this fair vale of childhood, where flowers bloom and brooks babble, and birds sing, and innocence weaves her fresh chaplets about each young brow. See the millions of little children sleeping in quiet cots, rocking in tiny cradles, crowing in mothers' arms, dandled in fathers' laps, trooping in and out the homes—the joyous, happy, promise full millions of Anglo-Saxon childhood!

From each cot and cradle-side, from each mothers' arms and fathers' knee, go out the pathways that these children must tread, and these pathways lead directly on toward the countless temples of Home Drinking, Social Treating, and King Dramshop. Do you see the false angels grasping these children's hands and leading them straight into the temples? Do you see the little ones of ten or fifteen years ago bowing down as worshipers? Do you see them a little later driven by the hounds of appetite, despair, and lust, to fill up the mournful ranks of ruined ones on the dark river's bank?

Do you see all this, parent, teacher, preacher, philanthropist, statesman, Christian, and yet utter no warning to the millions of children, make no effort for their rescue, stretch forth no hand to close up these idol temples? Can you be silent, careless, idle? Look into the child faces of your home and give your answer.

Everybody needs a spring medicine. By using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the blood is thoroughly cleansed and invigorated, the appetite stimulated, and the system prepared to resist the diseases peculiar to the summer months. Ask for Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Take no other.

The Great Pioneer Newspaper.

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan is enjoyed by The Detroit Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of The Free Press is the history of Michigan. Published while this commonwealth was yet a Territory, The Free Press was recognized as a power in the land at the time of her admission into the sisterhood of states. From that day to this, the energies of the paper have always been directed to, and identified with, the advancement of the state's best interest; it has grown with its growth and shared in its prosperity.

It is no wonder that The Free Press claims the right to add to the glory of being the oldest, the even more honorable title of being THE BEST paper—the best for the Merchant, Mechanic, Farmer, the best for the Family, and, when quantity and quality of matter is considered, beyond question THE CHEAPEST.

In the Daily is published in compact readable form, in addition to its own special dispatches, all the Associated Press News, Quotations of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and State News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current Literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, 8 pages Daily, 12 to 16 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is 15 cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 60 cents a month or $7 a year.

THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS.

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the weekly edition, a fifty-six column paper—brim full of magazine and newspaper reading matter, crisp, attractive, interesting and instructive. ORIGINAL STORIES both short and continued, TOPICS OF THE TIMES, THE HOUSEHOLD, conducted by women, PEACE, LETTER BOX and PUZZLES; POINTED EDITORIAL COMMENT, SPECIAL articles on thousands of subjects, and a complete summary of the NEWS OF THE WEEK are among its attractions. It numbers among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known authors and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is continuous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per week. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. Price, ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.

Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

We understand that that quiet little village of Advance has been visited by a bear again.—Letter.—It turned out to be a dog. Funny people, couldn't tell a dog's track from a bear's, eh!

The enemy of labor is the man who deposits his money in the bank, not being in any enterprise therein unless he can see a dollar and fifty cents for each dollar invested; never employs a day's labor, unless he can cut down fifty cents off of every dollar he pays out for labor and it is the great number of such men that is grinding down the workingmen.

Daring Feat of a Bicycler.

A daring and foolhardy feat was performed by a bicycler at Cabin John Bridge near the city. The place is a general pleasure resort, about twelve miles from town, over the military road built by Jeff Davis while the latter was Secretary of War. The bridge is said to be the largest single span of masonry in the world. It is a 125 foot high and about 200 feet long, a single magnificent arch spanning a deep and rocky gorge.

There is a brown-stone coping on the three-foot wall on either side of the road-way. This coping is about a foot broad and is bevelled on the two upper edges for an inch or two. On the inside of these walls is the solid roadway slate the dust. On the outside is a perpendicular descent of 125 feet in the center of the bridge and so less than seventy-five feet at either abutment. The young man stopped and dismounted at the end of the bridge and lifted his machine upon the coping. The act was noticed by a couple of gentlemen smoking under the trees, but it was looked upon as a freak of a young man who had been drinking a little too much, and no particular attention was paid to it. The next moment there was an exclamation of horror from the direction of the bridge, and the young man was seen mounted upon his thirty-inch wheel deliberately riding along the narrow coping.

The sight froze the blood of the ladies and children picnicking in the grove below, and was enough to appal the stoutest heart. The gentlemen in front of the hotel started to their feet and called to the other wheelmen within. "Stop him! For God's sake stop him!" shouted a lady with two children clinging to her hands with fright. It was too late. The young man was already in the center of the bridge. He never reversed a half's breath from his seat. From the end of the bridge he seemed a toy machine running by mechanism, so erect and motionless he sat and so rapid the rate. "Let him alone," cried one of his companions, "he could ride it if it was a rope." Nevertheless the fear that interference might hasten the hour that all wished to prevent left the party rooted to the spot. In two places the coping makes a slight rise in the bedding of the roadway and at these places the rider rose from his wheel through a very narrow space—nearly the right angle with its course. The daring fellow had passed the first of these obstacles when the second he carefully wore around the second he carefully wore around the second he carefully wore around

Washington special:—Carlisle's friends say that they think he will not accept the leadership of the Treasury Department. It is generally believed the President is very much inclined to offer him the place, but will probably not formally do so without knowing Carlisle's sentiments on the subject. On the whole, it does not look as though Mr. Carlisle would become Secretary.

POLITICAL.

Public sentiment in Missouri caused the House to reconsider its vote refusing to provide for the maintenance of the State militia. A country member of the New York Assembly has introduced a bill to prohibit the custom of treating to drinks in saloons. The Ohio House put through a measure for the abandonment of the Wabash and Erie Canal, but the Senate promptly tabled it. Public Printer Benedict's nomination has been acted on adversely by the Senate Printing Committee. A Washington special to the Chicago Times says:

The immediate ground for deciding against him will be his failure to comply with the Senate bill that a lawyer be appointed Public Printer. Mr. Benedict is not a practical printer, but he was in the office of a country paper. He has, at most, but a few months' work to his credit in the printing business. He went into the office with the idea, which he acted on for years, that he was a lawyer, and he had been in the office but a few before he was a racal, and that he had enough of the business to meet with a capital K. He discharged several foremen employes at once, on the ground that they were Democrats, and he did not think what the appointments warranted but he has since been greatly disappointed in the result, until it is said on good authority that there are more people employed in the office now than there were a year or two before. Most people have gone to his for employment and presented letters from Senators and Representatives, with an influence degree of freshness that if they would get their several friends to confirm, would be equal to what he could do in making peace for them. It isn't political etiquette to vote down a Senatorial recommendation, but it is quite the reverse, and Senators do not like to be told that they must hesitate and reconsider before they will treat their letters of recommendation with respect. Many Senators, some time ago, were ready to vote for any person who came to them from a Senator, but when they found that it was a waste of time to try to help to find places where there can earn a dollar or two a day, are now ready to vote for no Senators and invite them vote for the Public Printer's confirmation.

The verdict of the Coroner's jury that has been investigating recent railroad horror at Bellevue, Ohio, is a startling document. The jury attributes the accident to culpable negligence on the part on both the railway officials and the trainmen. According to its report the engineer of the freight train was in an unsafe and unnervious condition; the conductor was exhausted by nearly seventeen hours' continuous labor and exposure; the conductor of the passenger train was in a condition of mental stupefaction from fear; the Marshal and Deputy Marshals, Sections 2 and 3, were incompetent for their duties; the signaling and lighting the cars, which caused loss of life, was dangerous and in violation of law. The jury expresses its hope that under the laws of Ohio the persons responsible for the slaughter can not be criminally prosecuted.

Mrs. General David Hunter, who has just died at the National Capital, was Martha Lord, daughter of a Chicago pioneer, and was born in that city in 1826, her sister, who married Dr. Alexander Wolcott, having been married a few years before her death in Chicago. Miss Lizzie was married when a boy lieutenant and a West Point graduate to the gallant General David Hunter, then a Major in the Fourth Artillery, stationed at Washington many years in recruiting service, and they made their home there, and they were seldom seen out of their own house. They were married in 1852.

A cablegram from Berlin, giving returns from 59 districts, shows the election of 45 Conservatives, 9 Imperialists, 2 Guelphs, 63 National Liberals, 4 new German Liberals, 24 Anti-semites, 6 Independents, 2 Poles, 1 Danish, 2 seats to be certain of, and 1 doubtful. A cablegram from Paris says:

The result of the elections in Alsace have caused a feeling of the deepest sensitiveness in Germany. The Prussian Government, however, has not, as yet, signed Pfeffer's report, which is to be presented to the Reichstag, and which will probably be followed by a decree of the Government, annulling the election of Dr. Lichtenberg, Socialist, who is the only representative of the German Social Democrats, who, in the Chamber, was returned by large majorities.

Bismarck will dismiss the new Reichstag to be elected, as soon as it meets, if it contains a majority against him.

Leaders of the Conservative party of Great Britain held a conference in London, Thursday. The Marquis of Salisbury expressed the hope that through a reform in the rules of parliament the Government will be able to deal with the question of local government in England. A Catholic member of Parliament stated his view that Catholics should be tried in London by a jury of English Catholics instead of against the Irish National League.

The last grain from the elections in Germany show that the Government will have a majority in six districts of Berlin. The Government will probably have a majority in the Reichstag. Surprise is expressed at the strength shown by the Socialists throughout the empire. A Berlin dispatch says:

The elections in this city have resulted unfavorably for all the Government candidates. The Government will make no ministerial change, if it be necessary, but in each of three divisions the Government candidates have to face a run-off party. The net result of the Berlin voting is as follows: Socialist, 19; new German Liberal, 2; old German Liberal, 1; Conservative, 2; total, 24. The Government parties have gained 15,000 votes, the Socialists 7,000. Liberals have lost 5,000. An analysis of the poll by shows that the central districts, which are thickly populated by the poorer classes, have generally voted for the Socialist candidates. It is stated that Singer and Hasselmann will be elected in the Fifth and Sixth districts. The result is regarded as a triumph for the Social Democrats, two of whose candidates are returned by large majorities.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

A BILL providing for an additional Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico, passed the Senate Feb. 17. Mr. Blair's bill appropriating $15,000,000 for the construction of public schools, and $5,000,000 for city sanitary vessels for yellow fever, and an act for the delivery to their rightful owners of certain trusts deposited in the Treasury Department by the Secretary of War, were also passed. Mr. Voorhees's bill to provide for the Texas Texarkana-Sabine Railway bill, which provides for the incorporation by Congress of a company of nine eighty other persons named of Texas and the Pacific Ship-Railway Company, in Alabama, and the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, with subsidies was passed, yeas 31, nays 16, with an amendment thereto offered by Senator Cullom, of Illinois, providing that no certificate of stock shall be issued until it shall have been paid in full, and that the company shall be prohibited from issuing its bonds in excess of the paid-up capital stock, and that the same at less than their par value. Mr. Wilson presented a petition from the Knights of Labor in favor of a National Board of Arbitration. The President sent the following nominations to the Senate: Ashley M. Ashley, of Massachusetts, to be assistant Treasurer of the United States at Boston; Jesse P. Gilman, to be surveyor of Customs, Burlington, Iowa; Owen McGuinness, Indian agent at Fort Sill, Oregon; Chickasaw Indian book; Arthur E. Delaney, of Wisconsin, to be Commissioner of Pensions; James A. Gray, of Ohio, to be Governor of Utah; William W. Armstrong; Charles E. Hooker, of Mississippi, to be Governor of Hot Springs, Ark., and the Land Office at Huron, Dak. In the House of Representatives the bill for a new public building for Chicago passed the Senate, yeas 130, nays 7. Texas bond bill failed to pass over the President's veto, the vote being 151 to 76, two-thirds being required to pass over the veto, and only 151 voting to 115. The conference report on the anti-polygamy bill, which had previously gone through the House, passed the Senate Thursday by 127 yeas to 5 nays. The 3rd and 4th sections of the bill apply to prosecutions for polygamy, and provide that the fact that a person is a competent witness, but do not compel either to testify against the other, except in proceedings for bigamy, or cohabitation with more than one woman. The Marshal and Deputy Marshals, Sections 2 and 3, are authorized to summon as jurors persons competent in the county where the offense is committed, notwithstanding the challenge of the defendant. Section 5 provides that no person shall be disqualified from being a juror on account of his opinion or conscientious belief touching the lawfulness of polygamy or any other offense. The conference report on the Dockery bill, which provides for the disposition of certain expenditures, and for the collection of certain revenues, is not alone demanded, though the House insists on the retention of the provision which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to refund or be empowered to refund, the money illegally collected under duty adjudication, and the House conferees have receded from their position in regard to the appropriation of certain expenditures upon Probate courts with the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings to enjoin the payment of such expenditures, if illegal, and to bring suit in behalf of the United States to recover back the money so illegally paid out. Democratic Judicial Convention.

The democratic party of the twenty-fourth judicial district, comprising the counties of Grand Traverse, Leelanau, Antrim, Kalkaska, Charlevoix and Cheboygan, are hereby requested to unite in sending delegates from their respective counties to meet in Mitchell Hall, Petoskey, March 11, 1887, at one o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to fill the vacancy of Circuit Judge in the district above named, to elect a new judicial committee, to transact such other business as may be within this province. Counties will be entitled to the following representation, being on the basis of one delegate for every 300 votes cast at the last election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than 200 votes:

Antrim 6, Charlevoix 4, Cheboygan 7, Emmet 7, Leelanau 4, Grand Traverse 8.

Grand Rapids Convention same day.

The Saginaw Weekly Courier has been enlarged to 12 pages, and ranks with the best in the state.

The kick by the republicans against the prohibition state ticket is simply an excuse for hedging on the amendment.

If the amendment is carried by a minority vote, it will make matters worse than they are now, for a majority of the public will not support and make laws to enforce the interest of the amendment.

The prohibitionists held their state convention at Lansing last Thursday and placed a state ticket in the field, as follows: For justices of the supreme court, Judge Cheever, of Ann Arbor, and Lemuel Chute, of Ionia. For regents of the university, David Preston and A. B. Cheeney.

The attitude of the republican press toward the prohibitionists since the latter nominated their state ticket is quite convincing that the republican party was not sincerely in favor of prohibition when they voted to submit the amendment, but did it rather with the intent of trying to prevent a third party ticket this spring. Now that the "third party" ticket is in the canvass, the republicans propose to defeat the amendment.

At the republican state convention last week, Judge James V. Campbell was nominated for justice of the supreme court for the term of eight years, Col. Chas. D. Long, of Flint, for the term of two years, and for regents of the university, Chas. Hibbard, of Baraga, and R. W. Butterfield, of Grand Rapids. In mentioning the proceedings the Detroit Free Press calls it "one of the most boisterous, and wild-eyed conventions ever held in Michigan."

Hon. M. V. Montgomery, commissioner of patents, will resign about April first to resume the practice of law. Of his administration the Detroit Free Press says: "Mr. Montgomery's administration of the patent office has been fully in keeping with the expectations of friends, who knew him as a thorough-going, strong and sound lawyer of great push and energy. He has done great work during his term in the office, and its record of what has been accomplished clearly tells the story of his efficiency. It is to be regretted that the country will soon lose the service of so competent an official."

A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, Schr. Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and New York, had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only gave him instant relief, but stopped the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were similarly affected and a single dose produced the same effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the stand-by family remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner. Free 1 oz bottles of this standard remedy at Dr. G. W. Crosier's drug store.

THE STATE TICKET.

The democratic and greenback parties failed to unite on a ticket, and there is now four sets of candidates in the field. The democratic nominations are: for justice, short term, Levi T. Griffin, of Detroit; for long term, Charles W. Camp, of East Saginaw. For regent of the university, Bartley Green, of the upper peninsula, and R. S. Sprague, of Greenville.

The greenbackers nominated O. J. Atkinson, of Port Huron, for justice short term, and W. H. Miller, of Gaylord, Otsego county, for one regent, and instructed their state committee to fill the balance of the ticket in case the democrats failed to agree to the division of the ticket.

FOR CIRCUIT JUDGE.

The Elk Rapids Progress says: "A. D. Cruickshank, of Charlevoix, is prominently mentioned as candidate for judge on the democratic ticket." We are pleased to support that motion. Mr. Cruickshank has a good standing in the circuit as a thoroughly progressive lawyer, fully informed on all the latest decisions of state and federal courts, and conscientious in construction of the law. Wherever he is known, the people have confidence in his judgment, and if the convention at Petoskey, March 11th, should name him as a candidate, we believe no mistake will be made.

Democratic County Convention.

At the county convention held at Boyne City last Friday, Henry A. Jersey was elected secretary of the county committee to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of Geo. E. Sweetland.

The delegates elected to the state convention were C. J. Grier, of Charlevoix; E. Shay, of Bay Springs; F. E. Bossinger, of East Jordan; and M. Dickinson, of Boyne Falls.

Railroad Notes.

The C. & W. M. R. R. Co. has made a contract with Dexter & Noble for the Queen of the Lakes—the popular Capt. Jobson master—to run on the route on Black lake this coming summer, making connection between all trains and the resorts at the mouth of the lake. The Queen has been rebuilt and raised some eighteen inches during the winter, and will be entirely safe and comfortable for a load of 600 passengers.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

Traverse City put some sugar on a stick and tried to coax the D. C. & E. R. R. over that way. Mancelona held up her apron to entice it; but it became that way or it wouldn't amount to anything, you know; while Kalkaska took the old black stocking down from the chimney corner, and reached way into the toe of it after the hard earned dollars laid by for a rainy day. Result: Kalkaska takes that plum.—Kalkaska Leader.

The C. & W. M. Co. intend to complete their extension from Baldwin to Traverse City and Elk Rapids before the snow flies next winter. The precise route selected has not been announced yet, but probably will be in a few days.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

A Million Dollars.

Millions of dollars would be saved annually by the invalids of every community, if, instead of calling a physician for every ailment, they were wise enough to put their trust in Golden Seal Bitters, a certain cure for all diseases arising from an impure state of the Blood and Liver, such as Scrofula in its various forms, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Female irregularities, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Exposure and Imprudence of Life. No person can take these Bitters according to instructions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poisons or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair. Golden Seal Bitters numbers on its list of cures more than any other medicine known, and have already conferred a great celebrity, being used generally as a family medicine. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and G. W. Crosier.

Buckleen's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever sores, Tetter Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Dr. G. W. Crosier.

The First Sign

Of falling health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Miss.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, and as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Dyspepsia and Headache, before the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians, and tried a great many kinds of medicine, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. . . . I believe without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Local Notes and News.

Candidates for spring election will soon hob up serenely.

Railroad building all over the state has strewed a big boom.

The oval wood dish factory at Mancelona burned last week.

Jas. Hemmingway's new house on Antrim street is nearly completed.

H. S. Harsha received another new Chicago Cottage organ last week.

Dr. Carlstedt's lecture on Life in Europe elicits much well deserved praise.

N. N. Card, of Norwood, made us a call to day, while on his way to Petoskey.

Some of our dealers report a gratifying increase of trade during the past few weeks.

Charles Swallow is painting and otherwise decorating the inside of Weed's drug store.

Admission to the Minstrels only 20 cents. Reserved seats 30 cts. Tickets at Weed's drug store.

Dr. N. J. Perry sold two Storey & Clark organs last week, and will have more here in a few days.

Mrs. R. A. Campbell went to Petoskey to-day, to take charge of affairs at the Occidental hotel.

Do not fail to hear Prof. Enos on "Conditions of Success" at Green's hall next Wednesday evening.

Subscribers desiring to pay for the JOURNAL with wood, will please bring in the wood to exchange for paper.

Upright Bros. have moved their safe and abstract books into the office one door north of the postoffice.

The Manistique Sun rejoices in an increase of circulation to the extent of one new patron to eaten it; but it come that way or it wouldn't amount to anything, you know; while Kalkaska took the old black stocking down from the chimney corner, and reached way into the toe of it after the hard earned dollars laid by for a rainy day. Campbell Bros. are preparing plans for a new yacht for Hon. J. A. Anderson, to be 56 feet keel and carry 2 tons of ballast.

The reading room has been closed, except on Friday afternoons. The library will be open as usual Tuesday and Friday afternoons.

By the looks of our docks, the business next spring will be better than last. And everything points to an early opening of navigation.

Byron See returned home from the south last Friday. Mrs. See remained at Atlanta, Ga., for a short return to Charlevoix in about a month.

Henry Barth completed the work on the boilers of the Elk Rapids Iron Co. and returned home last week ready to take the first job that comes.

R. C. Enos, principal of the Leland schools, is publishing a series of "Talks with teachers," in the Traverse Herald. Ralph is a son of Prof. H. M. Enos, of Charlevoix.

A bird's-eye view of Charlevoix last Monday morning, would make a fine picture. Snow was piled high in every direction, and branches of shovels were busy making roads.

Mrs. Ayers, mother of Mrs. E. B. Hodge, had a partial stroke of paralysis last week, and for a time her friends had little hope, but now she is better, and is making slow improvement.

The pastor of the M. E. church will give a third discourse to the young people of Ironton and vicinity, next Sabbath morning, and in night he will address a mass temperance meeting. All are invited.

Dr. Sawyer returned from Chicago last Friday, and for the present will make his headquarters at the Newman House. An office has been established in Chicago, and Mrs. Sweetland will remain in charge.

Two weeks ago we mentioned that Lillie Sine had run a needle into her knee, broken it, and the physicians were unable to remove the broken parts. Up to this writing the pieces are still irritating the flesh, the whole leg is inflamed, and blood poisoning is feared. Her condition is serious.

During her term of school at Black's Miss Gladys Jefferies has cultivated a spirit of rivalry in penmanship among her pupils, and shows some very good specimens of improvement as a result; Among those who have made the most improvement are Anna Meggison, Eliza Black, Edith Beers, Hattie Thompson, Eva Beers, Willie Meggison, Josie Lunn and John Ward, Jr. Two handsome prizes were given as a reward of merit.

The Mastodon Minstrel Company (home talent) will give an entertainment at the opera house next Monday evening, March 7th. The bills announce them as larger, better, funnier than ever, comprising four end men, "every one a star," three champion clog dancers, two Dutch comedians, and one Irish comedian. A laughable program has been prepared and the management promise a full evening's entertainment.

The business men of Benton Harbor have had their heads together and organized a $50,000 church, opera house and office furnishing company, because a Chicago firm sent out word that it would take $10,000 stock run the thing for a year and guarantee a profit of 10 per cent, under penalty of forfeiting the entire interest. The promptitude with which their offer was snapped up made the Chicago men dizzy, but they are coming to time.

The Elk Rapids Iron Co consumed in their furnace during the year ending Feb. 1st 1887, 1,649,089 bushels of coal, 36,839 tons of ore, 2,518 tons of limestone. They purchased during the same period 47,815 cords of wood and 5,746,983 feet of logs, and made 19,527 tons of pig iron and 4,759,000 feet of lumber. They shipped 23,973 tons of pig iron and 2,926,092 feet of lumber. The Bangor Chemical Co. shipped 59,004 gallons of wood alcohol, and 1,244 tons of acetate of lime. The value of above products shipped was $528,851.—Elk Rapids Progress.

On Sunday afternoon Messrs. Eaton and Washburn, of the village council, accompanied the snow plow on its rounds to look after the proper clearing of the streets. Will Horton's mules, and John Nicholls' big lumber team together and all they could do to draw the plow through some of the drifts. A small gang of men was also out, digging through some of the worst places in the principal streets. We doubt if there has been a storm this winter when the snow was piled up higher or was more stubborn to handle than that of last Saturday and Sunday.

The Charlevoix county W. C. T. U. completed their organization last Thursday afternoon for the spring campaign by the election of Mrs. J. H. Stone, president; Mrs. W. F. Emery, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. T. Waterman, recording secretary; Mrs. W. C. Lenox, treasurer; and the president of each local union as vice presidents. Thursday evening, Mrs. Thurman, of Jackson, and others, addressed the people on the subject of the amendment. On Friday evening the ladies of the Charlevoix union gave an oyster supper at the Bridgeport Street home, receiving between eleven and twelve dollars, the profits to be applied toward the expenses of the amendment campaign. The ladies feel that a good deal of money as well as hard work is necessary to carry the prohibitory amendment. Some favor the employment of a good speaker in Charlevoix till after election, while others think that central missionary work in the county around would be productive of better results and can be accomplished with a good deal less cash. The ladies realize that money is hard to get, and they know also that Charlevoix has plenty of speakers entirely competent to give a good wholesome argumentative address, and willing to give a portion of their time freely for the cause. A little good literature can be judiciously added to each of these "missionary meetings," and make the whole expense very trifling. We have reason to believe that the liquor element is already thoroughly organized and earnestly at work, yet there has not been, and probably will not be, a word of argument uttered by them in public. Everything is done quietly. Every member of the W. C. T. U. can do good to the cause by the circulation of prohibition literature, and by constantly taking of the benefits of prohibition, among her friends and neighbors whom she knows to be doubtful on the question, and do it with less hard work than some of them gave to the convention and oyster supper last week.

Historical Society.

The program at the meeting of the Historical Society on Friday evening last, at the residence of L. D. Bartholomew was exceptionally good, consisting of the following numbers: Piano solo, by Miss Winnie Bartholomew; cornet duet, "Lind to the Convent Bells," Misses Aggie Miller and Blanche Bartholomew; paper, "The Religions of Persia," Mrs. A. T. Waterman; vocal solo, Miss Cody; piano solo, Miss Alice Cochran; reading, "The Automatic Cradle," Miss Rose M. Cody; vocal duet, "Only Thee," Mrs. Hines and Mrs. E. M. Clark; recitation, "Katie's Treasures," Miss May Waterbury; instrumental duet, Miss Cody and Mrs. Guyles; piano solo, Miss Carrie Hilton.

The large number present testified to the prevailing interest in the Historical Society, and all unite in pronouncing this occasion one of the foremost of the season.

The society will meet Friday evening, March 4th, with Mr. and Mrs. Levi Blanchard; paper by Major E. H. Green.

M. E. Church.

Teachers and others desiring to study the lessons, will be welcome at the parsonage at 7 sharp every Tuesday evening.

Thursday evening, prayer meeting, to be followed by a meeting of the church and its friends to consider the necessity of some repairs on our house of worship. All are invited.

In consequence of the storm the sacramental services were postponed, and will be held on the coming Sabbath at the usual hour of service. Come to the table of the Lord and renew your covenant with God.

W. H. MCCARTNEY.

Band of Hope.

Band of Hope at Green's hall on Saturday next, at three o'clock, as usual. Please be present on time, as there is important work to be done.

A prohibitory amendment may be passed this spring, but if the children are not taught its importance, it will fall into desuetude when the present generation passes away. So come and help inculcate temperance principles in the minds of the children that they may be able to hold in after years what the fathers are trying to win for them. SECRETARY.

Baptist Church.

The presentation of the subject of Foreign Missions having been deferred one week, will occur next Sunday morning. Usual evening service.

Preaching at Hilton's school house at 3 p. m.

Prof. Enos will deliver the third lecture of the home course, Wednesday evening, March 9, at Green's hall; subject, "Conditions of Success."

Finger-Rings in the Piano.

At a sale which took place on the death of the rector of a parish near Chester a piano was knocked down to a tradesman of the city. On being opened and repaired two costly rings were found beneath the keyboard. The finder communicated with the rector's widow, when the following and story came to light: Eleven years before a lady staying at the rectory had lost these very rings. She had evidently taken them off while playing and had thrown on the piano, and they had then somehow slipped in under the keys. Suspicion, however, had fallen upon a maid then in the service of the family, who was soon afterwards. Her father, a small farmer, was terribly upset at the disgrace which had fallen upon his name and family, and refused to receive her. The poor girl went away from the neighborhood; in fact, she disappeared. On the finding of the rings every endeavor was made to find her, but in vain. Advertisements were even inserted in the public newspapers, promising her a considerable annuity, but all in vain. Unjustly suspected, she had hidden herself from all her former belongings, and was never heard of again.—Cassell's Magazine.

A Nice Ohio Miser.

An old miser named James Walker died at his home in Uniontown, this county, possessed of a fortune of more than $250,000 that is known of, and there is perhaps more to be discovered. He was a bachelor and one of the very peculiar specimens of humanity. He lived in a little log hut, and in the summer season lived principally on clover and bran. He spent most of his time in winter in bed, and ate raw cornmeal to avoid the expense of fuel. Once, some years ago, he walked to the bank in Canton with coupons on $15,000 government bonds which he had cashed, and then walked to Wheeling to deposit the amount. He was dressed only in blue cotton pantaloons, brown muslin shirt, and straw hat—no other garment—and he walked the whole forty miles barefooted. During the last two years he had been very feeble and a sister cared for him. He had apparently a sound mind, and was credited with being shrewd in business transactions. A mistake of 1 cent in his cash and tax receipts only two years ago caused him to walk twenty-two miles back to the county treasurer's office, which was given him by the treasurer out of his own pocket.—Bellaire (O.) Special Dispatch.

☞Drs. Starkey and Palens' advertisement of Compound Oxygen in this issue of this paper should be read by all our readers. The cures which this treatment is effecting are almost miraculous. In the few years since its discovery they have treated in all parts of the world upwards of seventy thousands patients. Over forty thousand of these have given testimonials that they are cured and a large proportion of the others report great benefit from its use. Their offer to send a 200 page book free, giving a history of the treatment, with a large number of testimonials, is a liberal one. Read the advertisement and send for the book now.—Adv.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worn out with disease, when there is no reason for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof, that Green's August Flower, will make them live from disease, as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint are the direct causes of seventy-five per cent, of sick headaches, Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Costiveness, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the Head, Palpitation of the Heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. cow1

Remarkable Cure.

Mrs. Phoebe Cinesley, Peterson, Clay Co, Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, that truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 15 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my health to Electric Bitters for having relieved my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, only 50c, at Dr. G. W. Crosier's drug store.

Money Refunded.

The true remedy has at last been discovered. It was long known in his practice as Dr. Pete's Lung Food for Consumption. It is now called Dr. Pete's 30-cent Cough Cure. If the safest, the surest and the best. No other Cough, Cold, and Consumption remedy is half its equal. We warrant it and will promptly refund the money paid for it if a beneficial effect is not experienced by the time two-thirds of the contents of the bottle is used. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and Dr. G. W. Crosier.

HIDES, PELTS, & FAT STOCK WANTED

FOR ONE DOLLAR.

We are frequently asked by people when subscribing for some city paper why we don't put the price of the JOURNAL down to One Dollar per year. In reply, we cannot undertake to compete with a city paper which is printed with perfect machinery by the ten thousand or hundred thousand. It costs just as much to prepare a newspaper form for the press for one hundred copies as it does for ten thousand copies. A local newspaper seldom expects to extend its circulation beyond a few hundred copies per week, while the city paper which counts its readers by the ten thousand or hundred thousand is generally of very little or no value for local news.

To accommodate those who want a city paper and a local paper, and don't want to pay two dollars each, if they will bring us the cash and pay for both in advance at one time we will furnish the JOURNAL at the rate of one dollar a year. That is, for Two Dollars cash in advance, we will send the JOURNAL and either the Detroit Weekly Free Press, Chicago Weekly News, Herald, Inter Ocean, Toledo Blade, National Tribune, New York Weekly World, Montreal Family Herald and Star, or in fact almost any city weekly usually sold for one dollar a year.

We are able to do this because with the above papers we have special clubbing arrangements by which we receive those papers at a reduction from the regular rate. Their reduction allows us a profit.

Subscribers must remember however, that this is a strictly cash-in-advance rate, and all subscriptions now in arrears must be paid up in full at regular rates, and one year in advance at the reduced rate, to secure the benefits of the arrangement.

HOME.

BY S. S. LEWIS.

There is no place upon the earth,
Where love should reign complete,
More than it should around the hearth
Of our own retreat.
There blessed peace should ever smile,
And gone dissension's sway,
And jack-ass envy, pride, or guile,
Around the hearth at home.

When ever life's joyous and troubled waste
We pass with dusky shade,
And envy seeks around us cast
To transfix with sighs and tears,
Happy then will we long to leave
The scene of grief and gloom,
And fondly turn to the home
The memories of home.

When childhood's joys are pa'st away,
And days of youth are gone,
When death has strewed our hair with gray,
And death is stealing on,
Ah! then what pleasure 'tis to think
Of youthful sports, joyous hours,
Ere death does close the glazing eye
To look on earth no more.
O, then on Him place every care
Who has promised to be our guide
And bids us confide in realms more fair
An everlasting home.

SEEING A BATTLE.

BY JAMES FRANKLIN FITTS.

It did not happen to very many of the soldiers of the war of the rebellion that they were enabled to stand off and look on while a battle was in progress. It happened to me once under peculiar circumstances, and a magnificent sight it was.

This occurred at Fisher's Hill, Va., Sept. 22, 1864.

Two days before we woke from our lethargic beyond Winchester with ranks depleated by the battle, somewhat tired yet with its labors and excitements, and expecting to march at once in pursuit of the enemy. Everything was seen in motion: the cavalry thrown out for in the advance, the infantry marching through the fields in three columns, and the artillery taking the pike. From Winchester to Strasburg is twenty miles. Fisher's Hill is just beyond the latter place. Kearnstown, Newtown and Middletown are on the pike along this route, and the whole region was an old battle-ground. About every square foot of it had been fought over since the spring of 1862. For the first time our arms were thoroughly successful here; for the very first time, after the war had progressed three years and a half, a Union army was following up a thoroughly beaten and retreating enemy.

General Sheridan felt decidedly well that morning. His famous dispatch about "sending Early whirling up the Valley" had gone by telegraph the night before to Washington, and was at this moment electrifying the country. Winchester was the first positive, clear-cut, decided victory that our arms had gained since Sherman overjoyed Atlanta, and both people and army felt well over it. As our army footed along with the route-step, about ten o'clock that morning, Sheridan and his staff overtook us. I noticed that he wore a new pair of long buckskin gauntlets. The men cheered him, of course, and he bowed. But it was plain to be seen that he was "all business," and had no time for fuss or parade. There was not much of that "lacing and band of music" style about this army as a campaign. It would have been when he thought it necessary for the spirit and encouragement of his army, or any part of it; but he seemed in his natural element when he was putting the "go" into everybody and everything, as he was this morning.

As the great peaks of the Massanutton Mountains, and the frowning wall of Fisher's Hill began to appear in the dim distance, signs of something on hand were seen. The march and boom of artillery came faintly back to us. We saw staff officers and orderlies firing up the pike and across the fields. The Signal Corps were well out to the front, and from an eminence, from the roof of a house, a barn, or a tree, their waving flags were sending back intelligence of the enemy.

I was a wonderful and most useful arm of the service. Total value on this campaign was very great. Not only by daylight did it signal or flag or wave its flags, but it did so soon, but at night, with waving torches, from the high summits of this region, they were known to send news at a distance of ten and even fifteen and twenty miles.

Before night we halted outside of Strasburg. Our pickets were at the north end of the town, and the enemy's at the south of it. No fuss could be allowed, for they would have invited a hostile shell. My regiment was bivouacked in a ravine, and before lying down that night we partook of a sumptuous repast of hard-tack, raw salt pork, and water. Many a the time since that I paid a dollar for a meal that I relished far less than that humble "snack."

The next morning some of Sheridan's infantry charged through the town and drove out the Confederate pickets. Sheridan and the other Generals rode out well in front of Strasburg, reconnoitering the enemy's position. Some high ground, well advanced from the hill, Early had seized and fortified, and this Sherman determined to take, to demonstrate from. It took it after a stiff fight. During the real battle of the day the woodchoppers' axes were heard from this position, as they fortified it.

Pretty much the whole of this day was occupied in getting the army into position. The Sixth Corps held the right, facing the hill; the Eighth was held back in reserve, for a movement that Sheridan was meditating; the Nineteenth was on the left, its left flank "refused," or thrown back to conform to the course of the Shenandoah River, on which it rested.

It was quite dark when an order came to our regiment to go out and relieve the One Hundred and Sixteenth New York, on picket, taking the extreme left of our line. We fell in, formed fours, and started. We had a guide who knew something of the situation and the route to it, but he was not entirely certain, and he caused us some unnecessary marching, which did not improve our temper. I don't know of anything that is more irritating to officers in command of troops than to go blundering along on a dark night, searching for a position that they are ordered to take immediately, but the location of which they must find as they go. The best of tempers will sometimes give way under that kind of a strain, as some of our men did that night.

We were directed out through the town, beyond its eastern extremity. Had there been any light, we should have discovered that we were about to cross the Manassas Gap Railroad. We did discover the fact, but it was only by stumbling over the track when numerous "officers and gentlemen," as well as men with the musket, sprawled at full length on the sacred soil.

But everything has an end, and we finally got into position and relieved the other regiment. Our Major was the only field officer present; the Colonel had been wounded at Winchester, and the Lieutenant-Colonel at Pleasant Hill, away up the Red River. Major Curtiss took the left wing in reserve, and established himself with it just within the town. I, being the senior Captain present, was ordered to take the other five companies, keep a small reserve in double cartridges of powder, and go out and relieve the pickets with the others.

This was done in profound darkness, and, as my custom was on such occasions, I traveled the whole length of the line with the relief, that I might learn something of the location of the pickets. But it was useless to hope for such information in that obscurity. I knew that this was the extreme left of our line, and the Captain of the One Hundred and Sixteenth, whom I relieved, told me that the Shenandoah River was near by the picket line. For the rest, I knew that I had about two dozen picket posts, stretched over half a mile. I cautioned them to be vigilant and returned to my reserve, numbering thirty or forty men.

The night wore away. The excitement of these movements, of the situation, and the frequent relieving of the pickets, with the challenges all along the line which I could hear distinctly near, prevented me from having even those "cat-naps" which the soldier would have allowed. Sometimes I walked about and asked with the men about the stirring events of the day and thus far seen, and made come wise guesses about what would happen on the morrow. A few distant lights seemed only to intensify the darkness. There were a few in Strasburg, behind us, others off to the right, and some far off in front of us that I knew they must be across the river in the enemy's territory. New occurred an incident that has always seemed to me one of the operations of my whole service. So far in front of us that the sound could only have proceeded from the Confederate right, a band began to play. The distance must have been quite a mile; but the night was still, and the conditions of the atmosphere were favorable to the transmission of sound. I rest we heard "Bonnie Eloise," which some of our bands were accustomed to play, but in which they did not claim an exclusive property. Then my ears were surprised by "Yankee Doodle." This seemed strange enough, considering where it come from; but when, after rattling off "Dixie," the entertainment wound up with "John Brown," I experienced a mild astonishment. Whether it was harmless bravado, or what was really meant by such eccentricity, I never knew.

Morning came, the great curtain of mist slowly rolled away up the sides of the mountains, and disclosed the scene before us with all its savage grandeur as well as its prodigious beauty. It was remarkable, so wonderful were the military events which intended the close of this day, that the morning of the 22d at the base of these mountains, which towered up three hundred feet over our heads, while the silver thread of the north fork of the Shenandoah wound round their base. Our eyes were turned to the long line of Fisher's Hill. Along its summit were stretched the lines of Early's army, rallying here after their defeat. It seemed madness to think of attacking such a position as that; it seemed so to me, and, I have no doubt, to thousands of others on our side.

Yet it was done, and, with triumphant success! How, will be told further on.

The hours wore on into a while afternoon. Our position in reserve was rather isolated; the town and the road to our rear, as well as the inequalities of the ground, hid whatever battle-array, if any, was going on behind us. Our line of blue which curved up from the reserve of the regiment, inspected our position, and led to the front, of course idle, and naturally inquisitive, and some of the soldiers discovering a large vineyard near by, a numerous contingent was made of some bushels of grapes for the benefit of this part of the volunteer army. This was all well and proper, what followed was not so much so. One of those pushing and privileged lads had taken a bee-hive, and brought it into the reserve in his arms. One of the colony within, stung him, when he dropped his burden. Instantly the bees spurted out in an angry cloud, and in less time than it takes to write it, the whole reserve was dispersed with a fate distributed of stings. Four of them fell to me.

The whole scene was the very height of the ridiculous. Dozens of men were rolling, kicking, and slapping on the ground, others running as if for life, pursued by the infuriated insects, and cries of pain mingled with shrieks of laughter. The remnant of the reserve, observing the tumult, naturally supposed the rebels had commenced to shoot. When the lesson had sufficiently taught, we upon us luckless New-Yorkers, the section in a buzzing cloud hovering above the stacks of muskets; and it was full half an hour before we could regain possession of our arms. The fellow who was at the bottom of all this mischief was most glad to say, a liberal share of the stings, but he was really much the most amused as well as pain, he escaped any other punishment.

About the middle of the afternoon, the thing wore the most peaceful aspect, an officer of General Emory's staff rode up.

"The General directs," he said, "that you open fire from your picket-line. He wants to make the enemy in his front across the river show themselves.

I had two sergeants out to the line, to go each way and give the order.

"Commence firing; aim anywhere to the front."

I had been studying the ground opposite, which sloped from the river back to the mountains; and not observing the least sign of an enemy there, I had concluded that there was none.

But now, as the lively rattle of our picket fires ran up and down along the whole front of half a mile or more, the opposite side of the river was suddenly awakened to life. From behind walls and fences, from clumps of trees, from the ditch and window of a brick house, white puffs of smoke started up, and we heard the humming of bullets about us. The range was short long, but not too long for a good musket to kill. Nobody was hit on our side; how it was on the other side I do not know. Some of our men in their zeal put in double cartridges of powder, and got lame shoulders in consequence. But we had developed the enemy's position opposite; and when they ceased firing, in half an hour, I ordered our pickets to stop.

The afternoon passed. I could see no signs yet of anything being done. As it was afterward learned, what was being done was with the utmost silence and secrecy. Sheridan could not fail to observe that from the gigantic Massanutton's top, the position of every one of his regiments and batteries and every move made by them could be seen. Yet he did just the same as that which finished the battle of Winchester: to send the Eighth Corps far to the right, so far that it could climb the Little Mountain, entirely beyond the sight of the enemy. This movement must have been commenced in the morning, as the way was long, and much skill and patience were necessary to keep the movement concealed from the enemy, and other covers from discovery by the enemy.

I was ignorant of the other side that this movement was not even suspected by the enemy, that they descending from the clouds would not have created more panic than did Cook's men coming in upon their left and rear.

All this, however, was beyond my sight and knowledge at the time. What I did see was the magnificent attack of the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps, which ended in full in front.

The thing came with the more impetuous suddenness; it was all over in an hour or less, the enemy routed out of their position, losing sixteen cannon, eleven hundred prisoners, and retreating in disorder up the Valley.

There was hardly daylight enough to finish it in when it began.

The battle was fought, certainly, when the first gun was fired.

Sheridan had waited till the first shots of the Eighth Corps, far around on the right, were heard, and then launched both the other corps directly at his foe.

There was a large earthwork back of the town, which was built by General Banks in 1862. The heaviest of our artillery had been placed in it, and in the course of the battle of Fisher's Hill, as I saw it, was thrown over by the discharge of one of these great guns. A shell flew over Strasburg, bounding on the hill, and instantly a dozen or more large cannon joined in the strife. Artillery from the enemy replied, and as the shells with burning fuses darted through the twilight, they offered quite the highest degree picturesque and exciting. The infantry fire had not ceased when we heard repeated cheers beyond the town, and we knew that the battle was in the hill, west line after line of blue, with the yell, looks less than ten thousand infantry, with loud cheers, and the battle replied to with a yell, and as the shells with burning fuses darted through the twilight sky, the effect was in the highest degree picturesque and exciting. The evening chorus had not ceased when we heard repeated cheers behind us. Up from the hollow, dashing right at the hill, came the Sixth Corps, in line of battle. Not less than ten thousand infantry, with muskets fixed, were marching in a steep side, now in plain view, now hidden by the undulations of the hill. Here dotted the heights, as the enemy opened with their musketry, the Sixth Corps, and answered peals from the large guns, which, at this point, caused the prolonged cheering told us that another victory had been won.

In less than half an hour we received order to follow the army instantly, and rejoin our corps as soon as we could.

We came especially on the move. After the cavalry, the Nineteenth Corps had been advanced, and there was nothing either glorious or delightful about the time we had in overtaking it. The road up Fisher's Hill was choked with ambulances and artillery, all pressing along in the pursuit. Night was confusion, in addition, and nobody seemed to know what the orders were, the time of Early's army rallying here. It was fortunate for them that the darkness was so thick and blinding, for, though the pursuit by the infantry, ceased in an hour, cavalry and artillery were impossible to overtake the scattered fragments, the vast number of which, as fugitives, ambushed behind stone walls, fired on their pursuers. Our corps came away at this time over in one of the parallel valleys, trying to cut across a range through, so as to cut off the retreating Confederates higher up, but in this they failed.

At Woodstock we were permitted to rest from about four o'clock in the morning to ten. Then up and on again, for a long day's work. Slowly following up the retreating enemy, we skirmished with them several times.

O, the fatigues and discomforts of those flying marches—who that was there can ever forget them. Who can forget the glory, the sorrow over lost comrades, the sensations of heart that came to us with our great experience. What comrade can ever forget "the days when we went soldiering."

The Language of Gloves.

For "Yes," the glove one glove from the right hand into the left hand. "No" is said by throwing both gloves in the right hand. To express a doubt, that you are indifferent to a partner, place the glove on the left glove pretty off. If you wish a male friend to follow you, drop one glove, strike your left arm with both gloves, "I love you" is expressed by slowly and carefully smoothing the gloves on the right. Ladies fan fan desires to know whether her admirer is reciprocated, she is to put on half the left-hand glove, one finger at a time. "Go on your guard against the governor," or "your mother-in-law," as the case may be, is a message often sent, and it is given by deliberately twirling the glove fingers round the thumb. If the damsel is in a quarrelsome mood she simply makes a cross with both her gloves and proceeds to lay them on her lap in this position. These are the principal and most simple rules.—Tait's Mid Gazette.

SELF-DELUSION is ever averse from injury, though by injury alone can the charm be dissolved.

Co-operation Among English Workingmen.

The co-operative movement began about twenty years ago, in 1844 in twenty-eight Rochdale pioneers started a little store on the principle of dividing profits according to the amount of purchases. Their business capital was so more than £25, which had been most carefully collected and hoarded. From these humble beginnings the movement has spread among a vast number of the working classes throughout England and Scotland. In its present condition it is no doubt open to some criticism, but not even Robert Owen and the Christian socialists, including F. D. Maurice, C. Kingsley, T. Hughes Ludlow, and E. Vansittart Neil, who urged the importance of the movement, could possibly have hoped at the time that co-operation would ever reach its present development. A few figures will perhaps be useful as showing the extent to which the work has grown. In 1862 the amount of sales by co-operative societies in the United Kingdom was less than £2,500,000. In 1868 (the last returns made out) the sales amounted to more than £28,000,000; the number of societies which made returns of their business to the Central Board was 1,157, and the total profits amounted to £2,500,000, and the money applied to education amounted to nearly £16,000. In the twenty years (1862-82) the total sales amounted to £275,250,000, and the profits to nearly £25,000,000. All this shows that be remembered, is workingmen's money, and the whole of this business is managed by workingmen. Representatives, brought representatives whom they have elected from their own numbers. To show more clearly what an immense hold co-operation has over certain districts, the fact may be mentioned that in the county of Durham the members of co-operative societies amount to more than 30 per cent. of the total population; in Yorkshire, to 27 per cent.; in Lancashire, to 27 per cent.; in Cumberland, to 24 per cent.; and in Northumberland, to 22 per cent. Thus, in some of the great centers of English industry, a large proportion of the working classes are attached to the movement. At present the societies are larger and more numerous in the north than in the south.—Harper's Magazine.

Essentials of a Good Fighter.

In answer to the question, "What are the essentials of a thoroughly good fighter?" Sullivan said:

"Pluck, skill, endurance, and a good head on his shoulders. I tell you, sir, a man fights with his head almost as much as he does with his fists. He must know where to send his blows so they may do the most good. He must economize his strength and not score a hit just for the sake of hitting it."

"What portion of your antagonist's body do you aim at when you are in the ring?"

"Whatever" said Sullivan, "to hit my man above the heart, or under it, or on, or behind the ear. A man wears out pretty fast if he does not keep hammering away in the region of the heart; blows under the chin or behind the ear will knock out a man quicker than a hundred blows on the cheek or any other portion of his face. Now, John Marine has a scar on his left cheek that I received in his fight with Jim Dempsey, and which he will carry to his grave. I did not hit that Dempsey kept hammering away at my face, and John Marine was a long-headed fighter he would not hit me in that place, for strength in getting in there. That fact shows that he was not that he is deficient in generalship."

"Do you feel pretty well when your man is giving in?"

"Certainly I am," said the pugilist. "I want to hit him, of course, but when the punishment is beginning to tell on him. And, when I talk to a man before I stand up before him at all, I can make up my mind whether he is a fighter or not. There is more intelligence required in this business than outsiders give us credit for."—Sacramento (Cal.) Bee.

Persian Musical Criticism.

In Persia, story telling or poetical recitations take the place of our spelling bees and acting charades, says a writer in London Society, and often as soon as the repast is finished music comes on, or perhaps, a vocalist will vary the programme by favoring the company with a song. His repertory is very limited, for, to sing out of tune, matter, he will sing it over and over again, with as much pride as though he could boast of an unknown second to Orpheus himself; over and over again, without the slightest sign of weariness, and, what seems more strange, to the great interest of the listeners, although it sounds weird and unmusical to the unaccustomed European ear.

"Tah, tah, bah, good in the extreme," he critical from one to another, while the singer pipes from the very top of his high voice, and shakes his head to bring out the quavering notes to their fullest extent.

"Exactly like the bulbul" (nightingale), says the host.

"When it stings to the roses in the spring," puts in a third.

"Ah, Allah's works are wonderful," exclaims the first, sententiously, as he puffs away at the kalian, his turn having by this time come around.

In Persia, a loud, high voice being equivalent to a good voice, the singer who can sustain a note the longest is pronounced the best, for the skill of the vocalist depends upon the length of time upon which he can trill a note.

A LESSON WITH A MORAL.

When Will Our Eyes Be Opened to This Great National Calamity?

The year 1885 played sad havoc with many prominent men of our country.

Many of them died without warning, passing away apparently in the full flush of life.

Others were sick but a comparatively short time; in turn to our files and are astonished at the sudden demise of Arthur, President of Packard, of northern prominence, of malignant blood-humor, of Brighton's disease, of heart disease, of kidney disease, of rheumatism, or of pneumonia.

It is singular that most of our prominent men die of these disorders. Any journalist who watches the telegraph reports, will be astonished at the number of prominent victims of these disorders.

Many statements have appeared in our paper relative to the fatal nature of the diseases that carried off so many prominent men in 1885, are really one disease, taking on different forms according to the location of the fatal effects.

When a valuable horse perishes, it does the nice day tail of its sporting world, yet ten thousands of ordinary horses are dying every day, their aggregate loss is enormous, and yet their death creates no comment.

Now, as we wish individuals, the cause of death of prominent men creates comment, and we are pleased to know that most of our departed dead have carries off most of them, and yet "vast numbers of others are now in the world who have time every year from the same cause."

It is said if the blood is kept free from poison and, that heart disease, paralysis, nervous prostration, Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and many cases of consumption, would never be known. The uric acid, is the most active waste of the system, and it is the duty of the kidneys to remove it from the blood.

We are told that if the kidneys are maintained in perfect health, they will do their duty, and the blood will be free from uric acid and universal disease—caused by uric acid—will be a large exception.

But how shall this be done? It is folly to treat effects, while the cause is allowed to go on unchecked, and the cause, we should be known to the public as the cause of most of our sickness and premature deaths, is directed by "a great remedy by means of which, thousands upon thousands have been cured of kidney disease."

We can not see how Mr. Warner could have spoken so plain, if he intended to deceive the public, and for valuable specific should not so positively claim that it would cure kidney disease before the public in the same way, any more than a man who claims to be constituted like others, so many of them are incompetent.

It is admitted that Warner's Safe Cure is a great remedy, and public opinion has made it a great remedy, and proves that all the weight and importance of absolute truth.

At the time of the worst pain and in the blood involves pneumonia and rheumatism, and many of our best men have died with these masters of disease; but he need have no fear of Warner's Safe Cure if he put the limit of two and cures.

These diseases are strong, and may sound like an advertisement, but we are rejected as such by unthinking people, but we know that they are cured. Such testimonials are spoken by every truth-loving newspaper.

THE JOURNALIST.

George Parsons Lathrop, in the Chautauqua says: The chief requisite for beginners in journalism may be summed up thus:

1. A good English education. Learn to write English; I mean plain, straight, quick English, and use it. 2. Industry. Let your Latin and Greek adornments come in afterward. Study the history of the United States and Great Britain and Ireland; and study everything else that you can conveniently can. Drill yourself in writing swift, sharp, vigorous, yet graceful accounts of everything that comes under your notice, putting it picturesquely, but never at the cost of clearness and brevity.

2. Common sense.

4. Self-effacement of the relative importance of subjects.

5. Obedience, patience, punctuality.

6. In spite of attaining to these virtues, you will find it a hard, hard, much knowledge your brain may hold, never do or say anything which will lead the world to forget that you are.

Importance.

When you visit or leave New York City, save baggage, expressage, and $1 carriage hire, and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite Grand Central Depot.

613 rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, $1 and upwards per day. European Plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages, and elevated railroad to and depots. Families can live better for money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

THEY WERE NOT RESPONSIBLE.

A story is told of a grocery man of Sherwood old Yankee stock who, on several occasions, was surprised to find sums of money in his sugar. Where it came from was a mystery. It may have been hidden by slaves for a purpose, but for what it would be hard to say. The storekeeper, being too conscientious to keep the money without trying to find an owner, and likewise being very loath to give it up, hit on this plan to satisfy conscience and keep the money: Going to the merchants of whom he purchased the goods he inquired whether they were responsible for the sticks and stones and things in it. "No, sir," was the reply, "you must take the sugar just as we receive it; we are not responsible for anything in the barrel." It is needless to say that the storekeeper did not press the matter.—Boston Record.

THE magical effects of St. Jacobs Oil in removing the severe and stiffness make it invaluable at all times. Rheumatism and Neuralgia succumb yield to it.

STONEWALL JACKSON'S HALLUCINATION.

Stonewall Jackson had a number of strange idiosyncrasies. Among these was an idea he persisted in entertaining, notwithstanding his physician's declaration to the contrary, that one side of his body was heavier than the other. This was his right side, and he used to carry weights in his pockets on the opposite side to preserve his equilibrium. He consulted many doctors in regard to this fanciful malady, but was never rid of the delusion to his dying day.—Indianapolis Journal.

The Demand for Samples have been very large in consequence of the advertisement of the Chicago Gazette offering free sample copies, but the supply has been equal to it. Results have been so gratifying to the managers that the offer is continued, and a free sample copy of this popular family story paper of the West will be sent to any one sending name and address to the Ledger, 273 Franklin street, Chicago. The circulation of this popular periodical has been having a veritable boom the past winter. Send for a sample copy, and, if you like it subscribe. It is only $1.50 per year, half the price of the Eastern papers of its class.

Are You Making Money?

There is no reason why you should not make large sums of money. Some are doing it. All you need is the right kind of employment. Parties who can do the work in Maine, and they will send you, free, full information how you can do it, and make from five at home, wherever you are located, earnings of from $5 to $25 a day. "BUCHU-PAIBA."

Quick, complete cure, all annoying kidney diseases, catarrh of bladder, etc. $1.

If nostrils, throat, etc., appear to not wear or wash as well as formerly the reason is in the use of inferior ammonia-washing compounds that destroy the texture and tenacity of linen. Use "Sunlight Cake" instead.

PURE Cod Liver Oil made from selected livers, and sweetened by Lane, Druggist, 1 Park Row, New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the oils on sale in market.

WELLS' HAIR BALSAM.

A gray, restorer to original color. An elegant dressing. Cleanse and beautifies the hair. Produces a luxuriant growth. Never fails to restore gray hair to its youthful color. Cures scalp diseases and hair falling. 50c. and $1 at druggists.

The best thing on earth to add to starch to give it a fine soft smooth gloss is "Enamel starch." It is a liquid starch washing compound that can be so used that it will not stick to the iron, and makes the dirtiest looking linen look double that of any other.

HEMORRHOIDS is cured by frequent small doses of Pine's Cure for Consumption.

A NURSE'S FOOLISH NOTION.

A foolish notion prevalent among the lower classes is several centuries old that a babe at the breast can be insured against colic by being made to taste everything which the mother eats. The writer was once surprised to find her nurse about to give her baby cold slaw on this principle; the girl defending herself on the plea that her mother always did it, and that it was good for the child.—*Cor. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

HAINESVILLE, N. J., October 15, 1886.

E. T. HAZELTINE, Warren, Pa.

Dear Sir: I was taken with a very severe cold last Spring, and tried every cure we had in the store, and could get no help.

I had one village doctor prescribe for me, but kept getting worse. I saw another physician from Port Jervis, N. Y., and he told me he used Piso's Cure for Consumption in his practice.

I bought a bottle, and before I had taken all of it there was relief for the better. Then I got my employer to order a gross of the medicine and keep it in stock. I took one more bottle, and my Cough was cured.

Respectfully, JAMES MCELVEY.

The Sin of Intemperance.

The following paper was read by Mrs. W. C. Lemox at the W. C. T. U. convention last Thursday afternoon.

To the W. C. T. U.:

To belong to the temperance cause, or, in plainer words, the W. C. T. U., is a grand and noble thing. It is one in which any one who bears that title may justly feel proud of. If by striving we can only save one, our labor might not be in vain. But let us each with all our might and power, use all our influence in the right direction, and teach the young the awful downfall caused by intemperance. For we cannot expect to always turn those who all their lives have used alcoholic stimulants. We may, perhaps, benefit them, or their families, by teaching their sons or daughters that alcohol is deadly poison. Deadly poison, we say, because it kills the minds of the partakers, whether young or old. It makes desolate homes, grief stricken wives, sickly children, cold hearths, bare floors, and still barer tables. Just to think of children crying for bread, and clothing unfit to protect them through the long and severe winters, who do not know the warmth of shoe or stocking, and who are never sent to school and are thus growing up in ignorance. Mothers sitting up until the hands of the clock are long past midnight sewing, until their eyes grow dim with tears and want of rest. Even then, perhaps, the wretched husband dares to ask,—yes, even demands,—their hard earned pennies with which they are striving to keep the wolf from the door, that he might appease his appetite for that most dreaded demon, strong drink, in preference to giving their children even a crust of bread.

Pictures to yourselves such homes and you will make a true picture of thousand of drunkards' homes. Homes? We say they are not such as should be called homes. And can we sit idly by when we see it, and know it is our very duty to try and prevent and banish all such? We must have faith in God to fight the good fight which is before us. Then let us be up and doing, in a mild and forbearing way, for there is work for us all to do, some in one way, some in another; for we are not all fitted for the same channel of work. Where one might do good, others would utterly fail; so I say, let each strive to do good to the best of her ability, and to the honor and glory of God; for in ourselves alone we are weak, and we should look to a higher source for Divine help.

If sinfulness of intemperance had been taught in years gone by as it is at the present day, we would not have stein an evil to fight against now. The young men would have grown up to dislike and detest the very name, and if those that might have been good have had the cup offered, even thrust upon them, from the very hands of those we have and are to day rearing the suffering caused by not being taught the evil influence of intemperance. Just think of fathers offering their own sons the tempting cup, which sooner or later brings sorrow and disgrace, and sends many to the very brink of ruin. Some see their folly, or have more resolute minds than others, and turn in horror from the depth of sin and shame, and of such to-day we have faithful workers in our glorious temperance cause.

O, that the young of to-day may never have any cause of regret in after years, and may they be able to say their hands never offered the cup to any astray. We hope, trust, and pray, that we may live to see the day when such temptations and allurements are done away with. But we feel this cannot be accomplished until those who are chosen by a voice of the people, to represent each township, county, and state, and better still, the whole government, are temperance people. Then we will have a nation to be proud of. So, dear sisters, let us not be discouraged, but let our motto be "Ever Onward and Upward."

HEARTLESS CRUELTY

It is to delay a poor sufferer into the belief that some worthless liniment will cure rheumatism and neuralgia. Honesty is the best policy in the manufacture of proprietary articles as in all other matters, and the fact that the proprietors of Allsopheros have never claimed for it even all its merit would warrant has not a little to do with its wonderful popularity, and the thousands of grateful testimonials received by them show that their policy has been wise as well as right.

Experience has amply demonstrated that more outward applications are worthless. The disease has its seat in the blood, and any remedy to be successful must deal with the obstructive acid which poisons and inflames it.

Allsopheros acts on the blood, muscles and joints directly. It takes the poison out of the blood and carries it out of the system; it invigorates the action of the muscles and limbers the stiffness of the joints. It reaches the liver and kidneys, cleansing them from irritating substances, and, if followed up after the rheumatic conditions cease, it will restore these organs to regularity and health.

TED ANDERS, Watertown, Wis., says: "I have been more or less subject to severe rheumatism for fourteen years. During that time I was never free from the disease until I used Allsopheros. I have been laid up for months at a time; the last attack was five months. I could not assist myself, my wife was obliged to feed me and I had to be lifted in and out of bed. I have spent at least a thousand dollars with nothing but temporary relief. When I used the first bottle of Allsopheros I began to feel relief, and when I had finished taking the fourth bottle I was well and have been troubled with rheumatism since."

Every druggist should keep Allsopheros and Allsopheros Pills, but where they may not be bought of the druggist the Allsopheros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send either (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle or Allsopheros and 50c. for Pills.

For liver and kidney disease, dyspepsia, constipation, sick headache, nervous prostration, nervous exhaustion, headache, impure blood, &c., Allsopheros are unsurpassed.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Francis A. Swanton to Andrew Rankin, dated the 26th day of May, A. D. 1885, recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Charlevoix county, Michigan, on the 30th day of October, 1885, in Liber 2 of mortgages, on page 268, now owned by him, and Andrew Rankin to D. Chadwick, now owned by him, by which default the option to sue therein given, doth hereby declare the principal sum secured therein, as well as the interest thereon to be now due and unpaid. The amount claimed to be now due and unpaid at the date hereof, is the sum of Two Hundred and Seventy-one Dollars and Forty Cents ($271.40), principal and interest, and a further sum of fifteen dollars ($15) as attorney fee provided by law, and no proceedings have been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, therefore said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, viz: The south half of the south half of lot 2 in the Assessor's Plat of Charlevoix, Charlevoix county, Michigan, and the southwest quarter (¼) of the southwest quarter (¼) of section five (5), in township thirty-three north of range five (5) west, containing forty (40) acres, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage with the interest thereon, and the attorney fee and all legal costs, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Charlevoix county, at the house of Chauncey Rich, in said township of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 12th day of April, A. D. 1887, at one o'clock in the afternoon.

The Great Pioneer Newspaper.

The proud distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the State of Michigan is enjoyed by The Detroit Free Press. Established more than fifty years ago, its career has been one of uninterrupted success.

The history of the Free Press is the history of Michigan. Published while this commonwealth was yet a Territory, The Free Press was recognized as a power in the land at the time of her admission into the sisterhood of states, from that day to this, the energies of the paper have always been directed to, and identified with, the advancement of the state's best interest; it has grown with its growth and shared in its prosperity.

It is no wonder that The Free Press of to-day right to add to the glory of being the oldest, the even more honorable title of being THE BEST paper—the best for the Merchant, Mechanic, Farmer, the best for the Family, and, when quantity and quality of matter is considered, beyond question THE CHEAPEST.

In the Daily is published in compact readable form, in addition to its own special dispatches, all the Associated Press News, Quotations of the Produce, Stock and Money Markets, Congressional, Legislative and State News, and all the News of the World, besides a splendid selection of current Literary matter. The Free Press is issued every day in the year, 8 pages Daily, 12 to 16 pages Sunday, and is delivered by Local Agents in all the cities and towns of the state that can be reached on the day of publication. The price is 15 cents a week. It is also sent by mail to any address for 60 cents a month or $7 a year.

THE WEEKLY FREE PRESS.

To those who for any reason cannot arrange to take the Daily, is offered the weekly edition, a fifty-six column paper—farm full of matter—newspaper reading matter, crisp, attractive, interesting and instructive. OMNIBUS STORIES, both short and continued; TOPICS OF THE TIME; THE HOUSEHOLD, conducted by women readers; LETTER BOX AND PUZZLES; POINTED EDITORIAL COMMENT; SPECIAL ARTICLES on thousands of subjects, and a complete summary of the NEWS OF THE WEEK are among its attractions. It numbers among its regular contributors a larger number of the best known authors and writers than any other journal. Its circulation is enormous—exceeding one hundred thousand copies per week. If money, industry and enterprise can keep it so, it will continue to be regarded as one of the leading weekly newspapers of America. Price, ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR.

Every family in Michigan ought to take The Free Press.

Old Mr. Dennis is quite feeble now. Another severe blizzard Saturday.

Mrs. Botas has been sick with neuralgia.

Rheumatism seems to be all the rage now-a-days.

Mr. Botas is laid up with rheumatism for some time.

The Pine Lake Iron Co., kilns at Ironton started up on Tuesday, March 1st.

Mr. A. J. Beers has been confined to his home with rheumatism, but is able to be out again.

George Harman has also been home for a week with rheumatism. But is now at work again.

We noticed in last week's Citizen that Ironton has a light-weight pugilist. We wonder if any of the adjoining towns has one that will match him. We'll hold the stakes.

The winter term of school at the Advance district closed on Friday, Feb. 25. And the district board were well pleased with the teacher, Miss Annie Cooper, that she was retained for the spring term.

What is the matter with our voters? We don't hear any thing about them this year. We used to hear from them in the spring. Who is to be our next supervisor and treasurer oh! Time we were looking them out.

Joseph Boursaw (an Indian) died last Thursday of pneumonia fever. He had suffered for his days, having unconscious most of the time. He came here from Beaver Island last fall and since that time has lived with his cousin Wm. Boursaw, where he died. The funeral services were held at the Ironton Congregational church, conducted by Rev. Mr. Hodge, on Saturday, at 12 o'clock. He leaves six brothers and a large circle of friends to mourn his death.

An Arizona Parson.

And how is Parson McWhacker?" asked an ex-Arizonian, talking about old friends with a lawyer just up from Tombstone.

"Oh, the parson's all right. He's left the Methodists and turned liberal. you know."

"Don't say! I hadn't heard of it."

"Yes, he preaches on his own hook every Sunday night in the reservoir house, and he's doing a big business, too."

"Glad to hear it. The parson's a nice man."

"Yes, but he and I ain't friends any more. Took offense at a mighty little joke. Awful touchy these gay pilots. You see I went in to the stage door to see the show, and he thought I was a free-and-easy sort of fellow, and he hand struck against an overcoat hanging on a nail. I had something hard in the pocket, and it knocked a flask. I took it along to the box, and I offered him a drink, but the show was over. The parson saw me sitting down, and came out from the stage door. When he'd closed the door he turned around to me, and I saw that he was mad. He said, very deliberately, he had picked his pocket while he was asleep.

"That's all right, says I fishing the flask up from under my chair; 'here she is.'

"The parson's face lighted up, and he reached for it.

"'Empty!' says he.

"'Bottom!' says I.

"It's a mighty mean trick,' says the parson, serious. 'You might have left me one drink.'

"'Pshaw!' says I, 'come over with me to the Elite, and you can have all the drinks you want.'

"That's all very well, Mr. Lushkin,' says the parson, mad enough to cry; 'but you know well enough that a clergyman can't go up to a bar in San Cipo. You are a mass of profligate principles, Lushkin, and long may it it wave not for my cloth I'd give you a deal right here that'd make your fancy swim.'

"Of course that ended everything between the parson and me. Being a gentleman, I couldn't lick a preacher, you know; so I quietly told him to go to the lower levels, and went out into the house and joined the departing congregation."—San Francisco Post.

Graveyard Geography.

There have been numerous reasons given to account for the fact that the north sides of cemeteries are so often devoid of graves. In the west of England there is an idea that the north side was not consecrated, but was left for a playground for the children. Then, some again say it is from the tradition that Jesus, when dying, turned His head to the south. Another reason given is that the south is the sunny side, and the side where the church-door commonly is placed, and where, consequently, most people pass. The commonest reason appears to be that formerly murderers, excommunicated persons, stillborn children, etc., were wont to be buried on the north side, and some tries say that ghosts always choose the north side for their perambulation. There is, however, an ecclesiastical reason. The east is God's side, where His throne is set; the west man's side, the Garden of the Gentiles; the south, where the sun shines in its strength, is the side of angels and spirits; the north, the devoted region of Satan and his hosts, the lair of demons and their haunts.

Railroad Notes.

The report made at the recent annual meeting of the G. R. & I. R. R. showing the condition of the road for the year ending December 31, was very flattering, showing gross earnings $2,098,120.78, increase $151,983.26; operating expenses, $1,336,862.41, or sixty-four per cent; decrease, $3,596 or five per cent; net earnings and other credits to income, $760,593.15; increase, $156,878.08; charges to income for interest on bonds and other amounts, $746,405.74, leaving a surplus for the year of $14,487.39. The net earnings for 1886 exceeded by $107,138.44 the largest ever realized by the company. During 1886 the company put in twenty-three miles of steel rails on the main line, and the line from Fort Wayne to the straits of Mackinac is now entirely laid of steel. The total freight tonnage for the year amounted to 907,454 tons, an increase of 139,488, and over one half of this was lumber and other forest productions. The leased lines all show a rapid gain of business. The company carried 867,744 passengers, an increase 61,976. They start out for the year 1887 with encouraging prospects, the gross earnings for Jan. exceeding those of 1886 by $25,000 and the net week ending February 5 $7,000 ahead of the corresponding week of 1886.

Articles of incorporation have been filed for a company to construct a railroad between Petoskey and Alpena, a distance of 76 miles. The route selected is intended to open a large area of new country, and will connect at Alpena, take a southward dip into Montmorency county, turning north it will cross the northeastern corner of Otsego county, the northwestern corner of Cheboygan county, the northeastern corner of Charlevoix county and thence into Emmet county to Petoskey. By means of spurs it is calculated to open all of Presque Isle and Montmorency counties, and the western part of Alpena county. The capital stock of the company is fixed at $600,000. Messrs. Buckley, Wacister and Kull, of Petoskey; Messrs. Pack, Comstock, Fletcher, Maitz and Shields, of Alpena; and Messrs. F. F. Palms, M. W. O'Brien and John V. Moran, of Detroit, nearly all of whom have timber lands in the same region are interested in the company.

The Kalkaskian, in speaking of the new direction of offices for the Charlevoix railroad, says: "A plan of operation was decided upon, and preparations made for going to work at once. As soon as blanks can be procured for making contracts for right of way, men will go to work at the same, and preliminary surveys be commenced forthwith. The plan is to begin at Charlevoix and work through to Kalkaska, and work north, until the work will meet, and afterwards east. The directors have not fully decided whether to connect with the Michigan Central at Grayling or Pere Cheney. It is expected that the preliminary surveys can be made and the right of way secured by the time the snow is off, and everything ready to make the final survey and let contracts for the grading by October in the time fixed for the completion of the road."

The annual meeting of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad was held March 2d. The old directors and officers were re-elected, with Mr. C. D. Hughart, president; W. O. Shelby, vice and treasurer; J. H. Hughart, secretary.

Fooling the Hungry Chickens.

About a dozen long-legged white Spanish chickens were exhibited in the window of the fancier's store in Eighth street, below Locust, yesterday afternoon. About a dozen two inch urchins came along and admired the chickens and speculated as to whether they were intended for fighting or eating purposes. During the discussion one of the urchins pressed his nose against the window and a particularly long-legged rooster pecked at it. The boy jumped, then laughed, and turning to his companion said:

"Jimmy, I've got a scheme."

He scrambled in front of the store until he found a grain of corn and then put his scheme in execution. It was a very simple one and consisted of placing the grain of corn against the window-glass, when the whole flock of chickens made a scramble for it. They scrambled and fought for a short at that grain of corn until their beaks were nearly worn out in pecking against the glass and the boys were almost suffocated with laughter. The guileless chicks never tumbled to the ruse of the wicked boys but plunged after the corn as the boy moved it across the window with as much hope and eagerness after they had been defeated twenty times as on the first trial. When the boy stood on his tip-toes and held the grain about two feet above the tallest chicken, one rooster stood on the shoulders of another and doubled his beak against the glass until he fell back exhausted.

THE NOUVEAU CULTIVE.

THE NOUVEAUX riches, as a class, have been a good deal before the public, and their appearance and habits, both in the wild state and under domestication, are pretty familiar to all keen observers of the wonders of natural history. But there is another class in modern society, equally noteworthy, and in some respects even more preposterous and disagreeable, that seems to have escaped classification. It is that species of person whom we may denominate the nouveau cultive. Springs from illiterate stock in some uncultivated region, he has suddenly been plunged into an accidental penumbra of culture when well along in years. He has been "caught late." He has, accordingly, a most vivid appreciation of those things which seem to him to mark the difference between his present advanced position and his previous backward state. The little that he now knows is very conspicuous to him and to his relatives. His faith in certain second-rate makers of public opinion, especially since he has traveled and has seen the Building where these powerful things are produced, is very touching. He has religious convictions concerning the greatness of Washington Irving and Fitz-Greene Halleck, and perhaps of Young, Pollock, and Mrs. Hemans. He has read that Jeffrey said to Macaulay, "Where did you get that style?" and he, too, wonders where such a magnificent thing could have been found. Sometimes he copies passages, in hopes to acquire it for his own contributions to the county paper. He loves to qu

EASTERN.

Six boys were killed on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near Easton, Pa., by a fast passenger train while trying to avoid a coal train on the opposite track.

Four girls escaped from the House of the Good Shepherd in Brooklyn, by taking the keys from a keeper and climbing a high fence surrounding the institution. One was captured in Court street, from her peculiar costume.

Carl Schurz fell on a sidewalk in South avenue, New York, and injured his left hip so severely that he had to be assisted to his home. A similar accident happened to Gen. R. P. Butler in Philadelphia, the result being that his shoulder was badly wrenched.

A fire on board a lighter lying at pier 37, in New York, extended to the steamer North Star and vast piles of cotton along the dock, causing a loss of $250,000.

Mrs. Roxlana Druse was hanged at Herkimer, N. Y., for the murder of her husband in December, 1884. The details of the murder, as related in her dying confession, are horrible in the extreme. The murder of her husband was deliberately planned and carried out with a cold-blooded fiendishness that seems almost incredible. The victim was attacked while at the dinner table by his daughter, according to the preconcerted plan, and was thereupon shot in the head by his wife. The latter then called her son and a nephew, both mere lads, from an adjoining room, and compelled them to fire four or five shots into the body of the prostrate and dying man. Thereupon the wife hacked off her victim's head with an ax, the daughter standing by. The head was buried in an adjoining field. The body was cut up into small fragments, part of which were burned in the stoves at the Druse cottage, and the rest fed to the hogs. The daughter was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for life, and the boys were acquitted on account of their tender age. Until the night before her death Mrs. Druse boldly maintained her innocence, and it was only when the last hope of executive clemency had vanished that she admitted her participation in the crime.

WESTERN.

Voice and O'Neil, the East St. Louis policemen, have been indicted at Belleville, Ill., for the murder of ex-Mayor Bowman, of East St. Louis.

Mrs. Logan has made known to the Chicago Monument Committee her desire that the remains of the Senator be placed in the center of the circular plat in Jackson Park, comprising forty acres, and that her body be ultimately laid to rest there.

The fair features and inanimate bust of Baron Jaimel Nina Van Zandt, says a Chicago telegram, again repaid the crowd of curiosity seekers who throng Epstein's dime museum, for Judge Garnett has dissolved the injunction which had laid it away in the shade for several days.

Ira D. Sankey said at Pittsburg, the other day, that the Rev. Mr. Moody is to erect a building at cost of $250,000 in Chicago, to be used as a training school for Christian workers, and that the greater portion of the money has been already subscribed by wealthy Chicagoans.

Many farmers in the vicinity of Muncie, Ind., have found themselves compelled to purchase freedom from leases made to swindlers purporting to bore for gas and oil.

A severe storm prevailed throughout the West and Northwest, last week, blockaded many of the roads, and did considerable damage to railroad and other property

An engine of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Road exploded at the Polk Street Depot, in Chicago. Engineer Meinger and Fireman Lows were instantly killed. The locomotive was scattered a hundred yards in every direction, and everybody in the vicinity was terrify stricken. Several persons were badly hurt.

An east-bound Atlantic and Pacific Railway passenger train crashed through a burned bridge four miles west of Needles, Cal., and was wrecked. The wreck caught fire and three men were burned to death, E. L. Gilbert, a brakeman, and two Indians. These persons were hurt: Dr. M. J. Chase, of Gainesburg, Ill., bruised about the head; W. Marsh, of Quincy, Ill., leg hurt; Engineer E. J. Hodgdon, not expected to live; K. L. Pepper, mail agent; J. K. Dickinson, seriously hurt. The engine, baggage, mail, and express cars were consumed by the fire. Very little express matter, baggage, or mail was saved. A coroner's jury exonerated the railroad officials.

A Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago train killed two farmers at North Robinson, Ohio.

In the case of Perkins, imprisoned for contempt at Indianapolis for refusing to testify in election fraud cases before the United States Commissioners, Judge Gresham decided in favor of the prisoner, claiming that the vote for Congressman was not in question at all, and that the Commissioners had no jurisdiction.

Peoria merchants are organizing a large line to convey grain to the Gulf from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis.

By the falling of a roof of one of the buildings of the Brunswick Steel Works of Cleveland, O., one man was killed and eight others injured.

A Steele named Johnson, a soldier in the Salvation Army at Chicago, was convicted of stealing shirts and money from a residence.

Annie Marie Barker, aged 21, daughter of a well-known physician of Jefferonville Ind., committed suicide with poison because her marriage with Adam Bauer, aged 19, had been prevented by the latter's father.

SOUTHERN.

A negro named Stephens was hanged at Princess Anne, Maryland, for a criminal assault on a white woman 80 years of age.

A deposit of hematite iron ore, sixteen feet thick, has been discovered near Talladega, Ala. It analyzes 67½ per cent. of metallic iron.

Another earthquake shock was felt at Charleston and vicinity, which created considerable alarm, but did no damage.

Some thieves who took $2,500 worth of silverware from the house of Judge W. P. Bynum, at Charlotte, North Carolina, packed it into a box at New York and shipped it back to the owner by express.

In the United States Court at New Orleans, Judge Pardee decided that the tax assessment upon Pullman cars run upon railroads of the State is illegal.

WASHINGTON.

Mr. Montgomery, Commissioner of the Patent Office, has resigned.

Floyd Comptroller Durham has decided that there is no law under which a distrainer bond can be issued to the Chicago man who recently seized on a $1,000 coupon bond in order, as he said, to prevent its falling into the hands of bagmen.

A constituent of Congressman Payson, of Illinois, consigned to him a car-load of hay, with a request that he sell it in Washington and remit the proceeds. The unused freight bill has reached the Representative, and he has contracted to sell five tons to Odd Musicians at the ruling rate.

Mr. Peck, a Wayne County, Indiana, veteran, was granted a pension of $72 from date of his death, which entitles him to draw $10,393. He is blind, and was led around Washington for some time.

A working model of a torpedo boat of a novel design was last week exhibited to the members of the House Naval Committee, by the inventor, Gen. Beeban. The boat is intended to do effective service in cases where other forms of torpedo have failed—that is, where the craft attempted to be protected by a network of chain suspended beyond the hull by spars. The model is that of a vessel 150 feet in length, 23 feet in breadth, and 16 feet in depth, and intended to attain a speed of 24 or 25 miles an hour. A feature of the craft consists of a pair of brass tubes, arranged vertically on the sides and sloping downward, capable of firing torpedoes containing 200 pounds of dynamite or other high explosive.

POLITICAL.

The Wisconsin Senate adopted a resolution to submit a constitutional amendment prohibiting contracts for convict labor.

The Judiciary Committee of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives has favorably reported a bill proposing an important change in the jury laws of that State by legalizing a two-thirds verdict. In other words, a verdict can be found whenever eight of the twelve men in the box agree upon conviction or acquittal. Under such a law as this being jury law would soon become unknown, and the schemes of shysters to run in a crooked man on a jury would be thwarted.

Col. Robertson was refused admittance to the Indiana Senate Chamber, when he presented himself at the door on the 25th ult. Counsel for Green Smith filed a petition for the dissolving of the injunction case. A resolution was adopted to investigate the conduct of Senator Johnson, charged with striking Senator McDonald during the notice of the previous day. Senator McDonald made a speech in which, referring to the trouble between him and Senator Johnson, he said that nobody would have made such an assault except "a coward and a fool." He declared that he was personally responsible for what he said, either inside or outside the Senate. The Republican members of the Senate were present during the session, but refused to vote on any question presented by Smith as presiding officer. A resolution was introduced by a Democratic member proposing to submit the fourteenth constitutional amendment to the Supreme Court Judges with a view to a bond of arbitrators, and to abide by their opinion as citizens, instead of as judges, as to who should preside over the Senate. The resolution was adopted by the Democrats, the Republicans refusing to vote on the proposition.

Ex-President Andrew D. White, of Cornell University, telegraphed President Cleveland declining to allow the use of his name in connection with the formation of the commission under the interstate commerce act.

A favorable report on a bill establishing a railway commission has been made to the Nebraska House.

Gov. Lee has called an extra session of the Virginia Legislature.

The Texas Senate has passed the House joint resolution ordering a general election to vote on a prohibitory amendment to the State Constitution on the first Thursday in August next.

The United Labor party of Chicago held its convention, and placed the following ticket in the field: Mayor, Henry Vobeny; City Clerk, John M. Dollard; City Treasurer, Frank O. Stanbury; City Attorney, Jesse Cole; Full Town and Aldermanic tickets, who were also selected.

The Ohio Legislature was polled on the Presidential and Congressional preference of the members of both parties. The Republicans stood: Sherman, 69; Blaine, 10; non-committal, 2. Democrats: Cleveland, 29; Thurman, 11; non-committal, 2; anybody to beat Cleveland, 5. Gov. Foraker is the almost unanimous choice of the Republicans for a renomination, while the Democrats are divided between Congressmen Campbell and Price and Gen. T. C. Powell. A few favor Thurman, Geddes, McMahon, and Wilkins.

The President is very angry with the Democrats who voted to override the veto of the pauper pension bill, says a Wash'ton dispatch. He has expressed the views on the most decided language to those who have called upon him, and there are several who have already felt the force of the Executive displeasure.

A Mexico dispatch reports land quakes in the State of Michoacan, and a tidal wave in Oaxaca to the Wisconsin State time requires the Senate on the 1st inst. The Senate passed fifty-seven private pension bills in twenty-five minutes. Among the bills passed were the following: Bill to authorize the building of a bridge across the Missouri River at the point of Idaho to Washington Territory; bill to aid the Northern Pacific Railroad in the construction of a bridge across Nebraska River. The Senate ordered the seat of Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, to be vacated from 1889 to 1895. The injunction of secrecy will probably be removed soon. The bill to provide for a bridge on the river and harbor bill was adopted by the House of Representatives on the 1st inst. The House also passed the bill to increase the pension appropriation of $1,000,000 for the current year to $12,000,000 for the next year. The legislative and deficiency appropriation bills were also passed. The Senate on the 2nd inst. the Indian appropriation bill was passed for bridging the Missouri River at Kansas City, and the Mississippi at Keokuk.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Work of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

THE bill to create a Department of Agriculture passed the Senate Feb. 23. The bill creates a executive department to be known as the Department of Agriculture and Labor, with a Secretary, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretary to receive the same salary as the heads of the other executive departments, and the assistant to receive the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department. The Bureau of Labor and Agriculture, and the Agricultural Bureau are to be transferred to the Department of Agriculture. The Senate passed the resolution of Senator Thomas S. Hopkins over the President's veto. The President transmitted to the Senate the correspondence with the Government of Chili in the Baltimore case. The Senate passed a substitute for the Senate bill authorizing the Senate to retaliate upon the Canadians upon fishing and American fishing vessels. This section provides that if the President shall be satisfied that any foreign ship or vessel taking fish within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, harbors, or other places of the United States, or in the Mississippi at Grand Tower, Ill., Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Cairo, Ill., or in any other place on the 24th inst. A House bill was reported favorably for a right of way through Indian lands to the Southern Kansas and Nebraska Railroad Company, in Kansas, was unanimously passed. The President transmitted to the Senate the correspondence with Great Britain, relative to the seizure of the sealing vessel Carolina by the Russian cruiser Rasboinik. The Senate on the 2nd inst. Senator Sherman resumed. The House of Representatives refused by a vote of 157 to 76 to concur in the Senate amendment to the pork barrel River and Harbor bill. The House on Monday and Tuesday of last week passed a bill to amend the dependent pension bill. The vote was yesterday, 157 to 76. Speaker Carlisle Mr. Cooper thought that the report of the conference committee on the River and Harbor bill had come from the Senate in a mutilated condition and in the House's opinion. Mr. Cooper moved to recommit the report with instructions to the House conferees to insist upon the House provisions in relation to the Mississippi River improvement, yet signing the bill and some from the Southern States and the money section of the bill. Mr. Cooper said that the Senate had stricken out the House item for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Mexican war who had served during said to endowed women who had lost their husbands in the war. The House passed a bill to create a Court of Claims for the Southern District of Mississippi. Beginning with the year 1888 the Supreme Court will hold a term at Jackson, Miss., instead of at Vicksburg. The House also passed a bill to provide for the payment of certain claims against the United States for Indian depredations. The Senate passed the bill to provide for the payment of certain claims against the United States for Indian depredations. The Senate also Democratic Judicial Convention.

The Democratic parts of the thirteenth Judicial district, comprising the counties of Grand Traverse, Leelanaw, Antrim, Emmet, Charlevoix and Cheboygan, are hereby requested to assemble in Democratic Congressional conventions to meet in Mitchell Hall, Friday, March 1, 1867, at one o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of selecting a candidate to fill the position of Circuit Judge of the district above named, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention. Counties will be entitled to the following representation, being on the basis of one delegate to every 150 votes cast at the last election, and one additional delegate for a fraction of not less than one hundred votes:

Antrim 4, Charlevoix 4, Cheboygan 7, Emmet 7, Leelanaw 4, Grand Traverse 7.

Greenbush Convention same day.

THE republicans of this judicial circuit have renominated Judge Hamsdell.

HENRY WARD BEECHER died at his home in New York, at 9:30 Tuesday morning of paralysis. He was stricken last Saturday, and never recovered his consciousness. All the members of his family, and many relatives and friends, were present at the bedside.

It is no longer necessary for the republicans to howl about a "third party." By the failure of the democratic and greenback conventions to unite there are four state tickets in the canvass, and if the republicans can't hold their own against the the prohibitionists, they ought to get left.

Besides the prohibitory amendment another relative to the salaries of state officers is to be voted upon in April. This amendment fixes the pay of governor at $5,000, attorney general at $3,000, and the rest of the state officers at $2,500 each, circuit judges at $2,500, which last is no change from the amount now paid. This amendment ought to carry.

NOBODY can regret more than the Free Press does the failure of the river and harbor bill, but to charge that failure on the president, to the exoneration of congress, or to say that it indicates a feeling on the part of the former that he is above congress, is a mistake. It is the president's constitutional duty to pass upon all laws submitted to him by congress. To perform that duty he must pass intelligently upon the laws. If he is merely to sign bills because congress has passed them, the work could be done just as well by a clerk with a type writer. It was the fault of congress that the bill was sent to the president too late for the examination necessary before he could act upon it intelligently. Its failure rests, therefore, wholly upon congress.—Free Press.

"Protection."

The results of what is called the protective policy are now plain enough.

It has built up the cotton fields and the wheat fields of India.

It has driven our pork and butter out of Europe.

It is persuading France to exclude our corn and wheat and other agricultural products.

It is persuading us to spend millions upon armaments, and to follow the other nations of the earth in the policy of jealousy, hatred and war.

In return for all these evils what has it given us? A few sickly manufactures which cannot stand alone, and a million working people on the strike.

Verily this is the protection which the wolf gave to the lamb.—New York Star.

A Warning for Republicans.

It was the misfortune of the old whig party that while sympathizing with the general views of the anti-slavery men, it called them hard names, sneered at their earnestness and ridiculed their numerical weakness. The whig party sank never to rise again and the anti-slavery men stood upon its ruins under the name and guise of the republican party. That party, like Esau, disesteems its birthright when it reviles the supporters of a reformation as dear to their hearts and conscences as free soil ever was to the founders of the republican party.—Detroit Journal.

Ways of Wine-Jobbers.

The wine-jobbers sometimes resort to a scheme that puts money in their pockets but keeps that of their customers long tied up in cellars. For example, a new brand of wine comes into the market. The first consideration of the jobber is how to get a run on it. The customary advertising methods are brushed aside as inadequate and slow, for you should know that wine must go with a fizz! bang! boom! else it will be a losing speculation.

Three good-looking, well-dressed gentlemen walk into a leading hotel, register as from distant and different cities, and order a sumptuous dinner. The head-waiter is asked to produce the wine list of the house. They scan it carefully and begin to growl. "Never saw a first-class hotel with so meager and back-numbered a wine list. Haven't you the Marco Bozaris wine here?"

The waiter politely replies that it is not in the house if they do not find it on the list.

"Then send out for it," is the command.

"Very sorry, gentlemen, but I am not authorized to do that."

The three Marco Bozaris drinkers orateorically enlarge upon the second class character of a hotel that does not keep "the best wine that ever was brought into New York," being careful to make their oratory and the text thereof understood by all the guests in the room. After dinner they saunter up to the office and ask the proprietor why they can't get Marco Bozaris's wine at his tables, enumerate generally on its superior qualities, and cleverly, though boisterously, manage to leave an impression all over the house that life is of little worth without Marco Bozaris.

The next day the new brand is added to the beleaguered hotel's wine-list. The next day I counted the list at dinner and found that my hotel was carrying twenty-two brands of champagne, for not above a half-dozen of which is there a call once in three months. Then I made inquiries of the steward, who told me the true story of the three oratorical advocates of Marco Bozaris.—Detroit Free Press.

A Million Dollars.

Millions of dollars would be saved annually by the families of every community, if, instead of calling a physician for every ailment, they would use enough to put their trust in Golden Seal Bitters, a certain cure for all diseases arising from an impure state of the Blood and Liver, such as Scrofula in its various forms, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Female irregularities, Diseases of the Kidneys and bladder, Exposure and imprudence of Life. No person can take these Bitters according to instruction and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poisons or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the power of repair. Golden Seal Bitters numbers on its list of cures more than any other medicine known, and have already acquired a great celebrity, selling used generally as a family medicine. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and G. W. Crouter.

RULED BY PREJUDICE.

Few persons realize how thoroughly they are controlled by prejudice even to their own disadvantage. For many years the treatment of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica and headache has been by some outward application, and, therefore, without stopping to think that the origin of those troubles must, from necessity, be internal, the weary sufferer continues to rub, run and find no relief. Athlophoros is taken internally, and as a proof that this is the correct principle, it cures surely and quickly. The testimonial of those who have been cured ought to convince the incredulous.

Lowell, Mich.

We are satisfied that Athlophoros is giving the best satisfaction of any rheumatic remedy we are selling.

HUNT & HUNTER.

George S. Baldwin dealer in coal and wood, Kenosha, Wis, says: I was afflicted with rheumatism for several years, and at times suffered quite severely. I used two bottles of Athlophoros and found my health relied.

Lambert Smith, Jr., Sheboygan, Wis, says: "I have had rheumatism for at least fifteen years. I did not suffer with it steadily, but was subject to attacks most any time, and always was to be laid up with it during the fall and spring of each year. The disease was not confined to any one part of my body it would appear first in one place then in another, but more frequently in my feet and ankles, which would swell out of all proportion. It is just about a year since I used a bottle of Athlophoros. Although I have passed through the fall and spring I have not had any rheumatism whatever since I used that one bottle of medicine."

Every druggist should keep Athlophoros and Athlophoros Pills, but where they cannot be bought of the druggists the Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall St., New York, will send either (carriage paid) on receipt of regular price, which is $1.00 per bottle for Athlophoros and 50c. for Pills.

For liver and kidney diseases, dyspepsia, indigestion, weakness, nervous debility, diseases of women, constipation, headache, impure blood, etc., Athlophoros Pills are unequaled. 1

Saved His Life.

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., says he was, for many years, afflicted with a cutaneous disease, also diabetes; the pins were almost unendurable, and would sometimes almost throw him into convulsions. He tried Electric Bitters and got relief from first bottle and after taking six bottles was entirely cured, and had gained in flesh in pounds. Says he positively believes he would have died, had it not been for the relief afforded by Electric Bitters. Sold at 50 cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

The extraordinary popularity of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the natural result of its use by all classes of people for over forty years. It has proved itself the very best specific for colds, coughs, and pulmonary complaints.

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a causeless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It checks the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and for the past twenty-three suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies.

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Sonvall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for Chronic Bronchitis, and all kindred diseases.—M. A. Hasl, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, fell on my lungs, and threatened a dangerous illness. I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It soon eased my cough, increased my strength, and greatly quieted my lungs. By eight weeks I was reduced from 200 to 140 lbs. My cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—S. P. Henderson, Saulsburgh, Penn.

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time completely cured. Whenever a case of a sudden cold I always resort to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward L. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various remedies, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once, and I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured.—Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

The relative importance of the amendment campaign in Charlevoix was made manifest Monday night. About fifteen or twenty persons assembled at Green's hall to discuss prohibition, while Bartholomew's opera house was packed to its capacity to witness the performance of our home minstrel company.

Long before the hour for raising the curtain on Monday evening, every seat in Bartholomew's opera house was filled to witness the performance by the home minstrel company. The boys presented as good an appearance as professionals, and their jokes and gags were mostly local, and had a very exhilarating effect on the audience. The boys acted a handsome profit and have the satisfaction of playing to the largest house ever assembled in Charlevoix. On Tuesday night they played in East Jordan, and to-night in Byron City.

Miss Gladys Jefferies closed her term of school at Black's, with an exhibition last Friday night. The exercises were quite long, but so interesting that no one thought of being tired. The several parts were well produced and showed much practice on the part of scholars and teacher. Miss Jefferies may well feel proud of her scholars and their entertainment. At the commencement of the term two prizes were offered, one for the most improvement in writing and one for the best specimen of the close of the term. The successful contestants were Gertie Smith, for the most improvement, who received a box of stationery, and Anna Meggison and Eliza Black for the best specimens, each of whom received a nice album.

Historical society.

The historical society met at the home of Mr. Levi Blanchard, Friday evening. March 4.

Major E. H. Green read a paper upon "Napoleon III and his reign," which abounded in historical fact, and was extremely interesting.

Mrs. Dr. Carlstein and Miss Phila Wood favored the society with readings, and Mrs. Littney, Mrs. Ellis Smith, Misses Blanche Bartholomew and Aggie Miller, Mr. O. I. Wheat and Dr. Perry furnished excellent music.

Arrangements have been made to meet at the home of D. C. Loveday in East Jordan, on Friday evening next, weather permitting, and a good time is expected. Should the weather prove unfavorable to the East Jordan trip, the society will meet at the residence of Mr. John Nicholls.

accomplishes for overbody nearly what is claimed for it. One of the reasons for the great popularity of the Mustang Liniment is found in its universal applicability. Everybody needs such a medicine.

The Lumberman needs it in case of accident.

The Housewife needs it for general family use.

The Canaller needs it for his trouble and his men.

The Mechanic needs it when he gets into work bench.

The Miner needs it in case of emergency.

The Pioneer needs—can't get along without it.

The Farmer needs it in his house, his stable, his hen roost, pen.

The Steamboat man or the Bateman needs it in liberal supply—it is and adapts.

The Horse-fancier needs it—it is his best friend and safest reliance.

The Stock-grower needs it—it will save him thousands of dollars each year of trouble.

The Railroad man needs it and will need it so long as he lives in a round of accidents and dangers.

The Backwoodsman needs it. There is nothing like it as an antidote for the dangers to life, inseparable from the life which surrounds the pioneer.

The Merchant needs it when he sees among his employees. Accidents will happen, and when these come the Mustang Liniment is invaluable.

THE NEW PARTY.

Proceedings of the Convention Called at Cincinnati to Form a New Party.

A Number of Women Delegates in Attendance—The Platform Adopted.

FIRST DAY.

The Industrial Labor Conference was called to order at Cincinnati on Tuesday, Feb. 22, by R. S. Heath, of Chicago, Chairman of the Executive Committee, with all the States represented except six. Ten women were delegates, among them Miss Marion Todd of Battle Creek, Mich., Mrs. Heath of Chicago, and Mrs. Dr. Severance of Milwaukee.

The conference was opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Lockwood, Baptist. Mr. Richard Trevellick was chosen temporary Chairman. The Rev. Mr. Lockwood made an address of welcome, in which he said he favored labor organization. The riot at Pittsburgh was the result of labor unorganized—the peaceful strike in New York was the result of labor organized. (Applause.) The convention by a rising vote gave thanks to the "minister who had the courage to speak as this minister had done."

At the evening session a Letter was read from Gen. J. B. Weaver, of Iowa, regretting his inability to be present. He suggested that the platform should clearly relate to land, money, and transportation. He favored the election of Senators of the United States by direct vote of the people of the States. He begged the convention to not put any new and startling principles in the platform. In conclusion he said: "Go ahead; strike hard. 'The people shall be my people, and the God shall be my God.'" Mr. E. E. Hoal urged the conference to declare for prohibition. If this was done the party would have the prayers of every woman in the whole country, and of every man and child who has felt the sting of the curse of the open saloon. His address was frequently and heartily applauded. F. F. Scath, in reply, said if this party should kill the Prohibition party it would drive 300,000 votes back into the Republican party.

These permanent officers were chosen: President, A. J. Streeter, of Illinois; Vice Presidents, Richard F. Trevellick of Michigan, M. J. Kane of Iowa, B. S. Heath of Illinois, J. H. Allen of Indiana, and others; Secretary, M. D. Shaw of Missouri; Assistant Secretary, W. D. P. Bliss of Massachusetts; Reading Clerk, George H. Leonne of New York. Mr. C. A. Power of Indiana asked the conference to favor the repeal of the present pension laws and the equitable adjustment of the soldiers' claims, by which soldiers should be paid the difference between the paper they received and the value of gold, every soldiers' discharge to be his pension certificate.

A resolution favoring eight hours as a day's work in all Government, State, and municipal employment was referred.

Miss Marion Todd of Michigan made a speech in which she said that the laboring man had been disfranchised by the machinations of grinding monopolists and by the gross evils of the wages system of this country. Finance was not obtained through special legislation, through officials, through the nation, through the Pinkerton—"what shall I call them?" she asked. (Cries of "Assassins," "Murderers," "Murdering thieves.") "I leave the saying of the bad words to the gentlemen," said the speaker. She thought Henry George did not go far enough; has he did not see the evil of the money system. She was heard with intense gratification and given a rousing vote of thanks.

SECOND DAY.

The business not being pressing, a delegate moved that a gavel be procured for the use of the chairman, and the vote was formally taken and carried.

The Committee on Resolutions not being ready to report, Mr. G. L. Jones, of Wisconsin, got the floor by consent, and said the main question before the country was to get rid of the public and corporate indebtedness of this country. He supported his proposition by citing facts to show the great burden on the people caused by the interest-bearing debt. The remedy he proposed was by law to reduce and to remove that debt. This included a graduated income tax, the lending of money by the Government to the States, the States to lend to the counties, and the counties to the smaller municipalities; the Government to lend at 1 per cent, the States at 2 per cent, and the counties at 3 per cent.

On motion of Mrs. Severance, of Wisconsin, the rules were suspended and Mr. Crocker, of Kansas, was permitted to explain the Oklahoma movement, and to present a preamble and resolution in regard to that matter. Mr. Crocker proceeded to read a preamble reciting the action of Congress with reference to the acquiring of that ground, its grant to the railroad company and its subsequent forfeiture, and declaring that this land is now in the possession of a vast cattle syndicate by undue influence of the United States courts, the army and civil officers, and closed by a resolution severely censuring the action of the present administration, and demanding the passage of the now pending Oklahoma bill, and if this Congress does not pass this bill, then requesting the President to convene the next Congress in extra session to pass the bill.

Mr. Crocker then, in an impassioned manner, went on to speak of the wrongs of the Oklahoma colonists. He point was that the railroad corporation and the cattle syndicate were holding possession of this country by the power of a military nobody. He would not call it an army; it was a military noble. He pictured the peaceful purpose of the settlers, anxious to get homes and the gross outrages inflicted on them—arrested, subjected to indignities, in one case resulting in death to the wife of one of those men seeking a home. He closed with the hope that his resolutions, when presented for action, would be adopted without a dissenting vote.

Under the rules the resolution went to the committee, but Mr. Ridgely, of Kansas, moved to suspend the rules and adopt the resolutions, but upon vigorous protests he withdrew the motion.

Mrs. Severance, of Milwaukee, by request, addressed the convention. In her view, the condition in this country had produced two classes—the monopoly class and the wage slaves. She prophesied shortly the further slavery of the denial of free speech, unless the power of the great king monopoly is curtailed. Our Government now, she declared, was one of money—by money, for money. In conclusion, she outlined the platform which should be adopted.

Calls were made for Jesse Harper, of Illinois, and he appeared and made a ringing and characteristic speech, the chief burden being the wrong caused by the watered stock of the railroad and telegraph monopolies. He declared that the coming child of promise would swear by all the gods that there shall be no freight or passenger rates on watered stock.

Mr. Waters of Illinois offered a motion that the chair appoint a committee of five on permanent organization, to take charge of the organization of the new party throughout the country. The chair declared the motion out of order.

Mr. Eaton of Illinois, by unanimous consent, offered a scheme for the organization of the new party, outlining a plan for local club organization, and accompanied it with explanations.

Miss Elizabeth Culbertson of Michigan, and Mrs. E. V. Emery, also of Michigan, made addresses.

Chairman Robert Schilling, of the Committee on Resolutions, presented the report of that committee. He explained the long delay in preparing it by saying that the many interests involved and the suggestions made, amounting to more than two hundred in all, necessitated much time in coming upon a platform. The reading was vociferously applauded. Following is the platform.

The Delegates Highly Elated at the Outlook—Text of the Platform.

A mass ratification meeting was held at night in Music Hall, and was addressed by a number of the delegates. Less than two hundred delegates remained to-day, but they were, with very few exceptions, quite jubilant over their labors, and expressed themselves as most hopeful of the future. Mrs. Culbertson, of Michigan, declared that the platform was the best ever adopted by a political party, and predicted that it would surely carry her State. Colonel Morton, A Kansas delegate was certain it would insure a majority for her State in two years. An Illinois delegate and an Indiana lady were the platform writers, and have free in their sections. In fact, all the Western delegates were wholly enthusiastic. The Greenbackers are happy. Chairman E. H. Gillette, of the Greenback National Committee, said: "We will favor the union with the Union Labor party, but our National Committee will not disband. We will hold our organization, but I favor uniting heart and soul with the new party." A Western delegate said: "The bringing of the farm mortgage into the Knights of Labor is looked upon with a great deal of favor by the farmers of that organization. Now, every district in the Knights of Labor is entitled to one representative in the general conference. It takes but ten members to make an assembly, and but five assemblies to form a district. Powderly and the conservatives have controlled the demand of farmers into small assemblies and thus prevented their being represented in the conference by a large majority. Powderly's scheme to keep the farmers from outgeneral the socialists who are in the majority in the large assemblies, but represented in the general conference, has been delightful enough to the farmers

The struggle of the American home, the school, and the church against the combined power of the saloon, brothel and saloon death-trap is but another putting of the declaration of war between heaven and hell.

For a quarter of a century the business of rum selling has been sinking lower and lower. And the character of the dealer has steadily sunk with his business. The saloonist of to day is a man bankrupt in conscience With such antagonists we can wield no effectual argument but that of love.

Once in a long while you will find a respectable sort of a man who has been unfortunate enough to get into the whisky business. But it is so seldom that he is a genuine curiosity. And he will soon get out now. The physical and moral filth that gathers around the saloon is too strong for a decent man.

A Detroit traveling man was in Atlanta a few days ago, and from personal observation thinks that prohibition prohibits. He was stopping at the hotel with half a dozen commercial men who went out together after supper to try to get something to drink. After two solid hours of search the drummers returned, and upon being asked as to how they had succeeded, replied: "This is the closest town we've ever struck; we've looked the place all over, and have come back without wetting our lips with liquor." Anyone familiar with the penetration and ingenuity of the average drummer will conclude that things are close in Atlanta.

The Chicago fire was the one great conflagration of the world's life-time. All nations contributed to make up its losses. Its pecuniary damage was less than $300,000,000. Intemperance in the United States sinks $8,000,000,000 every year. The Chicago fire turned nearly one hundred thousand people out of their homes; intemperance renders Logodessy homeless six hundred thousand every year—two hundred thousand to the jail, two hundred thousand to the poor house, two hundred thousand orphans to be begathered to charity. A standing army nearly a hundred thousand strong, is marching straight to drunkard's graves every year. Can you reckon in dollars and cents the national loss occasioned by this merciless waste of men?

The hungry and conscienceless servants of the liquor traffic have long held the barrow bridge over a deep and muddy stream and have cast over its sides into the torrent below the unfortunate wayfarers who have attempted to cross. Below, manning the life-boats of the Washingtonians, the sons of temperance, the good templars, the red and blue ribbon movements, the W. C. T. U. and every other temperance organization, together with the church of God, the friends of the right have thus far worked tirelessly to rescue the drowning unfortunates. Now, still leaving their life-boats with crews sufficient to do the work of rescue, they propose to storm the bridge, strike the danger at its source, and make the path of the traveler forever safe.

Loyal Legion.

The name of the Band of Hope has been changed by request of the state president of the W. C. T. U. to Loyal Legion. It is desired that every friend of temperance should be present. The ideas formed in the minds of these children now will have a great influence in after years in governing their conduct toward the liquor traffic; and even should the prohibitory amendment not pass this spring, it will be ever so much easier to pass it some other time if the young are taught now where they should stand with reference to this great question. So don't fail to be present. Come one and all, old and young, and spend an hour pleasantly and profitably in looking into this matter which is revolutionizing the whole United States. Sec'y.

Miss Willard's Appeal for Michigan.

There is just one watchword for this hour: We must carry Michigan. The constitutional amendment now submitted to the people must not fail. Let us drop all other engagements and rally to the rescue. Let each one who can speak start at once for the scene of action and give their time freely in this most sacred cause. If every speaker in our ranks would contribute ten days' work, letting all other engagements wait, I believe that God's spirit going with our work would bring the victory. We have heroic men and women in Michigan—excellent organization and admirable leadership. Let us go where this blessed battle shouting, "The sword of the Lord—and of Gideon!"

Agitation Prohibited.

The following story comes from Kalamazoo: A drummer called at one of our leading drug-stores lately and wanted to sell liquors. Was told they had plenty. He said he was disgusted, and would leave Michigan and go to Illinois; that main 50 houses he had called on in Kalamazoo, and only taken one order, and that they didn't dare ship. "It was all on account of the fool amendment being submitted.

A Noble Example.

Miss Willard and Miss Gordon, during their amendment work in Michigan, ask only their railroad expenses, giving their time to the cause. Miss Gordon makes all Miss Willard's engagements for her, one-half of the lectures being under the auspices of the national union, and the remaining under the auspices of the national lecture bureau.

A Day of Prayer for Michigan.

Frances E. Willard, president of the national W. C. T. U., has issued an address calling on all local unions in the country to observe Tuesday, March 29, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., as a day of special prayer for the temperance cause in Michigan.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Ironton, February, 1887.

Respected Citizens, and Members of the W. C. U.:—I feel that in the great fight with intemperance, in order to be victorious, it is more fully before the people must be circulated through the medium of our local press. While we feel highly elated over seeing so many faces of our honored and humble members at our periodical meetings and gatherings, we do not see the faces of those we most desire to see, namely, a majority of voters, and especially those that indulge in an "occasional glass," we particularly wish to see and do not. Now is the quiet little town of Ironton, where we have no saloon, and every voter I talk with says: "why, of course I will vote the prohibition ticket." I would not suppose we had much to fight against; but it is through the press, and in places where drunkenness runs riot, that I learn of the necessity of our earnest endeavor to crush the demon of intemperance ere it crush us. One paper says: "It is the solemn duty of every liquor dealer to see that this provision scheme does not carry." Oh, sisters, let us be up in arms, and let the fire wax hot in Michigan, and let our temperance battle-field for the next month be a non-partisan one. Every man, woman, and child can unite in this conflict for the home against the saloon. There never was a time when activity was more in demand than now on the part of our beloved temperance people. Let us sow Michigan chin deep with literature, and while our state temperance papers are doing all they can, do not let the Unions be sleeping; do not be afraid to ask the aid, as I do, of our local press. They can but refuse, and God bless the hearts of people that permits us to send our temperance articles through the postoffice free. Constitutional prohibition has come as the main issue, and now we have work on our hands. This work is way down deep in my heart. We have no need to tell the sad, sad story of the drunkard's home. It has been told and retold. Every child knows its history. But let us work against it, and may God help us in the earnest wish of a weak but willing worker. MRS. R. L. ALLEN.

EASTERN.

The register of St. John's Church, Buffalo, shows that on Feb. 15 Margaret Mather and Emil Habersom, an orchestra leader, were married by Rev. Mr. Bullard.

The jury in the Minnie Clark-Kittson case at New York decided that, notwithstanding the performance of a marriage ceremony, Kittson was incapable of entering into any such contract, owing to drunkenness at the time.

Frank W. Foster, Town Clerk and Treasurer of Greenfield, Mass., is a defaulter for about $10,000, and has been lodged in jail.

The bodies of Mrs. Belle Ellsworth and John Neibert were found at West Newton, Pa. Both had pistol wounds, and are supposed to have died by their own hands.

WESTERN.

Representatives of sixty-eight trotting associations from fourteen States assembled at Detroit and unanimously decided to form a new trotting association, to be known as the American Trotting Association. Rules were drawn up and approved, and officers and directors chosen, William R. Morrison, of St. Paul, being elected President. The next meeting will take place at Chicago two years hence.

The brief in the Chicago anarchist case filed in the Illinois Supreme Court at Ottawa, by counsel for the condemned, is a printed volume of 436 pages. Leonard Swett had previously filed a document of ninety-six pages.

On the farm of Scott Gallaway, near Lacossine, Ind., customs officers seized $15,000 worth of horses smuggled from Canada.

J. A. Seddon, a well-known St. Louis lawyer, has been appointed Circuit Judge, taking the place of Judge Thayer, who succeeds Judge Treat on the Federal bench.

Mother Angela, the founder of St. Mary's Academy at Notre Dame, Ind., has just died in her sixty-third year. She was a cousin of James G. Blaine, and was educated at Georgetown with Mrs. Gen. Sherman. During the war she rendered great service by opening hospitals.

An injunction was granted at St. Louis preventing the Union Mutual Insurance Company from doing further business, and an expert was appointed to wind up its affairs. Its liabilities and assets are, respectively, about $125,000.

The blue-ribbon temperance movement has carried Vincennes, Ind., by storm, says a dispatch from that city. Over two thousand people have signed the pledge, and signers are pushed forward by the hundred. Everybody is amazed at the astonishing progress of the meeting.

A dark-complexioned, smooth-faced man of about 35 years, entered the waterworks at Chicago, on Sunday last, and stood watching the ponderous machinery. He moved to the south end of the room and glanced around to see whether any one was watching him. Seeing no one, he approached the walking-beam, threw off his hat, and crawled underneath the guard rail. As the beam descended he threw himself beneath it. The beam at the lowest point it reaches has a play of about four inches, and the body of the unknown was crushed into a shapeless mass. Death must have been instantaneous for he uttered not a groan. The body was hurled by the beam up on top of the cylinderhead, whence it was removed to the morgue.

Joseph W. Bingham, a well-known journalist, committed suicide at Indianapolis by cutting his throat with a razor. His health had been poor for some time.

Joseph Donaldson, a farmer, living near Canton, Ill., carved his wife and child some days ago, and was twice prevented from hanging himself. At last he procured a gallon of whisky, retired to a secluded spot, and drank himself into the next world.

SOUTHERN.

Mobile dispatches give some details of the burning of the steamer Gardner, on the Tombigbee River, by which twenty human lives were sacrificed.

The fire was discovered in a bale of cotton by Capt. Stone. A negro deck hand, in throwing water on the bale, set on his clothes afire. Panic stricken he ran from place to place setting fire to cotton. The flames ran up the rigging the boat was lost. She was in mistreasm and in motion. The pilots were driven from the wheel, and the crew and passengers jumped overboard. It is not thought that more than twenty lives were lost. Some persons saved himself by swimming ashore. The steamer Tally was behind the Gardner, waiting to pass. As soon as she came in sight out the Tally lowered her boats and threw over her cotton to prevent her from burning. Men who were jumping from the burning boat lost what was in reserve that the Tally did not go to her. Not boats picked up a number of people. When the fire broke out the Gardner was opposite a bluff, and the Tally backed, and boats were sent to run ashore. Some lost was in silence

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

For Justice of the Supreme Court eight years.
LEVI T. GRIFFIN.
For Justice of the Supreme Court ten years.
CHARLES H. CAMP.
For Regents of the University.
CHRISTIAN VANDERVEEN.
RUFUS P. STRAGUE.
For Circuit Judge—Thirteenth Circuit.
EDWIN S. PRATT.

The name of Christian Vanderveen has been put on the democratic state ticket for regent of the university, in place of Bartley Breen, who refused to be a candidate.

From the Harbor Springs Independent we learn that the judicial convention at Petoskey last Friday was called to order by P. B. Wachtel, and organized by the election of H. H. Lewis chairman, and W. M. Shurtliff secretary. P. B. Wachtel, E. L. Sprague and B. T. Halstead were chosen as committee on credentials. They reported the counties of Cheboygan, Emmet, Antrim, Grand Traverse and Leelanaw represented. J. R. Adsit presented the name of E. S. Pratt, of Traverse City, as being the most available candidate under present circumstances. After remarks by other delegates, Mr. Pratt was nominated by acclamation. C. S. Hampton was called upon and stated that the greenbackers had decided not to hold a convention, and owing to the action of the state conventions it was expected that the greenbackers would vote according to their individual preferences. A judicial committee was appointed as follows: H. C. Davis, Traverse City; W. S. Johnson, Northport; E. S. Noble, Elk Rapids; A. D. Cruickshank, Charlevoix; B. T. Halstead, Harbor Springs; Alex. McPhee, Wolverine.

The Democratic State Ticket.

The republican fear that fusion would be effected ought logically to have given place to exultation when fusion failed. But it has not done so. There is no exultation. On the contrary there is every indication of republican anxiety.

And well there may be. The disturbing conditions created by the prohibition nominations and the prospect that there will be five state tickets in the field are well calculated to shake republican confidence if it ever existed. They have a wholesome fear, moreover, of a united democracy free once more from all entangling alliances and supporting a ticket selected by its own representatives without dictation from any quarter. They know, too, that the democratic ticket is an exceptionally good one. It appeals to the soldiers, who are freshly represented upon it by gallant comrades who were with them in war days. It appeals to the lawyers who recognize in the candidates for the supreme court men of distinguished learning, ability and fitness. And last but not least it appeals to the people as an admirably constructed, well-balanced ticket, made up of men who while old enough to insure maturity and soundness of judgment are still young enough to be in sympathy with all progressive movements and reforms.

It is a ticket that ought to succeed, and the republicans are evidently very much afraid it will. Let the democracy see to it that nothing is done or omitted to lessen their fears in that regard.—Free Press.

A Democratic Reply to the Free Press.

Mr. Free Press, don't you know in opposing the prohibitory amendment, you are betraying the democratic party you profess to serve? Prohibition is the true democratic doctrine and don't you know the record of the party is unknown in favor of it?

What is the whiskey tax? It is a most vicious form of class legislation. Why should a saloon keeper pay $300 tax, and a dry goods merchant nothing? Why should a brewer pay $200 and a shoemaker nothing? Why should the cities get all the tax on the farming community nothing? The democrat party is opposed to all class legislation and they had no hand in passing this law. Wipe it out.

What is a license law? It is a law that will give a few individuals who are rich enough to pay a license, the monopoly of rum selling. Do you think, Mr. Free Press, that is democratic doctrine? Don't you know the democratic party is opposed to all monopolies? If rum-selling is a good thing, every man, rich or poor, should be allowed to engage in it. To so discriminate against the poor, in favor of the rich, is violating every principle of government.

But what is the record, Mr. Free Press? Don't you know the democratic party passed the original Maine law? Don't you know the democratic party passed a prohibitory law in this state, before the republican party was born? Don't you know every democratic state in the union has some form of prohibitory law? Don't you know that in Georgia, where there is no other party, only 15 members of the legislature voted against the prohibitory law? Don't you know that in Alabama, where there are not republicans enough to grease a frying pan, only one senator voted against the prohibitory amendment? Can you recall a single instance where a democratic state has repealed a prohibitory law?

Dont you know Mr. Free Press, that a consistent democrat must favor prohibition or free whiskey? There is no such thing as regulating the liquor traffic; you cannot regulate hell.—Ionia Standard.

How Phil Thompson Acquitted His Client.

A few years after the War Ed Collins, a shiftless fellow of Mercer County, was indicted for stealing cattle. The case came up before Judge J. C. Wickliffe, now United States Attorney here, then Circuit Judge. The trial was in the courthouse at Harrodsburg. Paul Thompson, Jr., was prosecuting attorney, and Paul Thompson, Sr., and Col. Thomas C. Bell, now assistant United States Attorney here, appeared for the defense. Collins had been a soldier in the Federal army, while every man on the jury, the prosecuting attorney, circuit clerk, and the judge himself had fought for the Confederacy. The witnesses were brought forward and a plain case of theft was made out against Collins. The only dependence of the defense was the testimony of Collins' daughter Rose, who was to prove an alibi. She was a beautiful woman, and was made to tell her story for all it was worth. Col. Bell made a most touching plea, appealing to the sympathies of the jury for a beautiful woman in distress with all the power of language he could summon. But the veterans of Dousison and Shiloh were unmoved.

Then old Phil Thompson laid himself out to mystify them and raise a doubt of the prisoner's guilt, and he, too, finally began to appeal to their gallantry. In the midst of a glowing sentence, however, he found the jury yawning, looking out of the window, and wholly inattentive. Breaking off his peroration the old lawyer leaned back on a table a moment, eyed the jury quizzically with a humorous twinkle in his eye, and said:

"Look here, gentlemen, this stealing was done during the War, and you can't do anything with a man for that. You, Tom Mundy," he continued, turning and pointing to the foreman of the jury, a strapping big Kentuckian, "don't you remember that sheep you stole in Powell's Valley? You can't convict Ed Collins. There was a general waking up of the jury, and a smile went round. "And you, Dan Bond, you know that horse you stole from Lord Alexander in the spring of '62? You can't send a man to prison for stealing cattle."

The smile broke into an open guffaw in one or two places, and half a dozen men on the back seats stood up.

As the old man took up the jury one by one and recalled his shortcomings the laughter became general and continuous. Finally he said: "And there's my son Phil. Wasn't he one of Morgan's worst horse-thieves? What can he say against Ed Collins? And you, Ed Butts, you remember that raid on that old Yankee sympathizer in East Tennessee? And can you raise your voice against him? And his Honor on the bench, if the truth were known—but the rest of the sentence was drowned in a storm of laughter and uproar of applause that shook the building. The jury was out three minutes, and brought in a verdict for acquittal.—Louisville Times.

The President's Vetoes.

Out of 122 bills vetoed by President Cleveland during the present session of Congress only two were passed, notwithstanding the objections of the Executive. And with respect to one of these two, final action was taken with the concurrence of the President in consequence of later information received by him. The tribute to the care and justice with which President Cleveland considers acts of Congress is a striking one.—New York Star.

Signs of a Break Up at the Straits.

CHEBOYGAN, March 12.—The weather has been warm and pleasant for several days. The snow is disappearing rapidly. If the weather continues pleasant the ice in the straits will certainly break up early in April.

A Million Dollars.

Millions of dollars would be saved annually by the invalids of every community, if, instead of calling a physician for every ailment, they were wise enough to put their trust in Golden Seal Bitters, a certain cure for all diseases arising from an impure state of the Blood and Liver, such as Scrofula in its various forms, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Female irregularities, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Exposure and Imprudence of Life. No person can take these Bitters according to instructions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poisons or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair. Golden Seal Bitters numbers on its list of cures more than any other medicine known, and have already acquired a great celebrity, being used generally as a family medicine. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and G. W. Crouter.
